The Office of Community Services will sponsor a 10-week, non-credit course in basic photography for amateurs, Director Paul H. Collins announced.

The classes will be conducted every Wednesday, beginning, Sept. 27, from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in Room 209, Smith Hall.

Center honors Dr. R.B. Hayes

The board of directors of Green Acres Regional Center for the mentally retarded has voted to present its Outstanding Service Award to Dr. Robert B. Hayes, dean of the MU Teachers College.

Announcement of the award was made by Grover C. Little, Green Acres board chairman.

Dr. Hayes served as chairman of a successful campaign to raise operating funds for the center near Lesage. At the time the campaign was launched, the center was threatened with the possibility of having to suspend operations because of financial difficulties.

In discussing the award, Green Acres Administrator David H. McGinnis said, "The center was in its darkest hour and it looked as though we might have to cease operations. At that point Dean Hayes agreed to head a campaign for community support. As a result of his leadership in that campaign and his insistence that we work toward future financial stability at the same time, Green Acres weathered the crisis and is now operating on a sound financial basis. His service truly has been outstanding."

President Barker, commenting on the award, said he recognized the dean's work with the center "as an excellent example of the town-and-gown relationship to which Marshall University faculty and staff make continuous contributions."

Scholarship award named for Teel

The Sarah and Pauline Maier Scholarship Foundation, Inc., of Charleston has awarded a $500 scholarship to Marshall University in honor of John W. Teel, assistant professor of English.

The "John W. Teel Scholarship" will be awarded as a prize for the paper of highest literary quality written in an English composition course at MU during the current academic year.

Teel was advised of the award in a letter from William Maier Jr. of Charleston, vice president of the foundation.

The basis of the award was an article by Teel, "Freshman English in the Age of Revolution," published last May by The National Review. Maier praised the article in his letter to Teel.

A committee made of members of the Marshall English Department will judge compositions and will announce the winner of the prize next spring.

classes will deal with the basics of camera choice and handling, exposure, composition and subject matter. Students will have weekly picture-taking assignments which will be evaluated by Hixson, who then will suggest improvements.

Any person interested in enrolling for the course should contact the Office of Community Services, 696-6440, for reservations as soon as possible as the class size will be limited, Collins said. Checks in the amount of $20 for the course fee should be made payable to the Marshall Foundation, Inc., and sent to Collins' office, Room 112, Old Main.

The class will meet every Wednesday evening from Sept. 27 through Dec. 6, with the exception of Nov. 22, the day MU's Thanksgiving recess begins.

Those enrolling should bring a camera to the first class session, Hixson said.

New parking lot is planned

President Barker recently announced that the site of Shawkey Student Union will become a parking lot. The new parking area, to be designated Lot K, will have 40 to 50 parking spaces. Joseph Soto, director of plant operations, said a requisition for paving the area has been sent to the State Department of Purchases in Charleston and advertisements for bids should be published shortly.

Dr. Barker said the decision to install a parking lot was made in an effort to help ease Marshall's critical parking problems. The lot will be removed after additional parking areas are obtained during implementation of the Campus Facilities Plan.

JOB-SEEKING PROGRAM

A program to train Marshall University seniors in job seeking techniques will begin on campus in October, Reginald A. Spencer, coordinator of placement, announced.

Sponsored by the placement office, a part of the school's Student Development Center, the course will include six weekly meetings, an hour to an hour and a half long, and will focus on preparing students to find jobs.

Spencer said the class will begin Tuesday, Oct. 10, from 3 to 4:30 p.m. and continue through the middle of November. The seminars will be held in room 2W22 of the Memorial Student Center.

The non-credit course is open to all seniors and attendance will be optional. Included in the lecture material offered by Spencer will be instruction in preparing resumes, how to fill out a job application, methods of writing letters of inquiry for jobs and tips on how to interview successfully. Career development will be discussed also.

In addition, Mrs. Helen Davidson, assistant placement coordinator, will present information on federal, state and civil service job opportunities and on the importance of individual career development.

Visiting guest speakers with expertise in various career fields will be a highlight of several of the sessions.
