University Council considers three items

The University Council met on Oct. 22 and considered the following items of business:

1. The Academic Planning and Standards Committee recommended modest changes in the Grade Appeals Policy. The council decided to submit the recommendations to the faculty through the News Letter (See story on page 3).

A subcommittee was formed to discuss a possible "conflict of interest problem on various University Committees or other decision-making bodies." The object of this effort is to provide, if justified, suggested "guidelines for dealing with situations where committee members are in a position to make decisions involving members of their department itself." (Quotes come from the letter to the council expressing concern.)

A request was received from the Student Conduct and Welfare Committee to submit to the faculty an

News media course designed for non-journalists

A new journalism course will be offered during the spring semester at Marshall – but it is designed for non-journalists.

Use and Understanding of the News Media, JRN 200, will give students an introduction to the roles and problems for various news media.

Bos Johnson, associate professor of journalism, said the course should produce better users and consumers of the news media. Johnson will coordinate the class, which will be team-taught by journalism faculty.

Some of the planned topics include the purposes of a free press, journalism ethics and news gathering, pro-

Honors Program to sponsor faculty research seminar

Marshall's University Honors Program will sponsor a Faculty Research Seminar again this year for all interested faculty members, according to Dr. Michael J. Galgano, MU University Honors director.

An organizational meeting will be held at 3 p.m. Monday, Nov. 3, in the Honors Lounge, Northcott Hall 209, with Dr. Charles Lloyd, assistant professor of classical studies, discussing his summer National Endowment for the Humanities seminar.

"The Faculty Research Seminar was held fortnightly last year and was a great success," Galgano said. In addition to specific faculty programs, one session was held with the Marshall Research Board.

"Last year's seasons were well attended, and did a great deal to help faculty become more aware of the variety and levels of research on campus," Galgano said. "We hope to see more of the faculty involved this year."

cessing, packaging and delivery. Also included will be discussion of consumers' rights in improving or changing news media.

Dr. Deryl R. Leaming, director of the school of journalism, said he believes the course is especially important to prospective business managers, since management today finds it necessary to deal with the press regularly.

"Most college students are planning to be managers of some sort one day. They have to know what they can expect from the press and how the media operate if they are going to deal effectively with news," Learning said.

The three-hour class, which has no prerequisites, will feature guest lecturers from local and area media. It will be taught Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 9 a.m., this spring.

Changes in grade appeal procedure recommended

The Academic Planning and Standards Committee has recommended minor changes in the Grade Appeals Procedure. The University Council has examined the recommendations and believes that the changes recommended are not significant enough to be considered in a faculty meeting.

Please refer to the Grade Appeals Procedure on page 15 of the current "Greenbook." The changes recommended are as follows:

 Number 4.b. is to be changed from "The academic dean in whose college the course is offered" to "An academic dean from a college other than the college in which the course is offered."

Number 5 is to be changed from "The full report of the action of the special subcommittee will be sent to the Academic Planning and Standards Committee which will hold further hearings." to "The full report of the action of the special subcommittee will be sent to the Academic Planning and Standards Committee which may hold further hearings." (Note: the second time that the word "will" is used in this sentence is changed to the word "may".)

 In addition to changing "will" to "may" in Number 5, please add the following sentence: "The committee will inform the student and the faculty person of the results of its committee decision."

4. Number 6 "Further appeal should be to the governing board in accordance with appeal procedures set up by that body." should be deleted.

Faculty members with concerns about any of the changes should contact Sam Clagg, chairman of the University Council. If sufficient concern is expressed, a faculty meeting will be called to discuss the recommendations.

The Academic Planning and Standards Committee and the University Council view the changes recommended as being of a positive nature.

amendment to the Faculty Consitution. The major aspect of the amendment requested that the number of student representatives on the Student Conduct and Welfare Committee be made equal to the number of faculty representatives. The Council requested that the chairman of the Student Conduct and Welfare Committee appear before the council to discuss the rationale for the request.

Firms donate $6,000

Two Huntington firms have contributed a total of $6,000 to the Marshall University Foundation this week, Foundation Executive Director Bernard Queen announced today.

Security Bank President Robert Beymer presented a $4,000 gift in behalf of the bank, Queen said, and Plant Manager Frank Pulcrano of Amcar Division of ACF Industries, Inc., presented a $2,000 contribution.

Both gifts were designated for the University's Greatest Needs account, Queen said.

CORRECTION

Dolores Cook was incorrectly identified in last week's News Letter in a story reporting election of officers of the new Staff Council. Mrs. Cook, who was elected vice chairperson of the Staff Council, is admissions/records officer II for the College of Liberal Arts, not admissions clerk and records officer as listed in the story.
