Judge Dunbar to head advisors board

Judge Russell C. Dunbar of Huntington was elected chairman of Marshall University’s new Institutional Board of Advisors at the group’s organizational meeting at Marshall last month.

David N. Harris of Huntington, personnel manager of Huntington Alloys, Inc., was named vice chairman and Elinore D. Taylor, assistant professor of English and the Marshall faculty representative on the board, was elected secretary.

Institutional Boards of Advisors were established by 1981 legislation for all of the colleges and universities governed by the West Virginia Board of Regents. They replace the former Advisory Boards of the schools and have greater responsibilities than those boards.

Marshall President Robert B. Hayes also announced the appointment of Dr. Paul D. Stewart as the Marshall administration’s representative on the Institutional Board of Advisors. Dr. Stewart serves as associate provost and as dean of the Graduate School.

Under the legislation, the new board consists of seven lay citizens appointed by the State Board of Regents, an appointed administrative representative and elected representatives of the student body, the faculty and the university staff. Eugene F. Crawford, a member of the university’s police force, is the staff representative.

Dr. Duke, British lecturer to exchange posts

A Marshall University History Department faculty member and an American history lecturer from Cambridge, England, will exchange posts for the 1981-82 academic year, Dr. Alan B. Gould, MU College of Liberal Arts dean, announced today.

Dr. David C. Duke, associate professor of history at Marshall, will take over the classes taught by Simon David Francis Sedgwick-Jell, first lecturer in history, at Cambridgeshire College of Arts and Technology.

“The exchange teachers not only exchange their classrooms, but also their homes for the program’s duration,” Gould said. “The program provides both educators a marvelous opportunity to compare educational and social differences between the two countries,” he added.

Duke, whose specialty is social and intellectual history, has been on Marshall’s faculty since 1972. He earned his doctorate from the University of Tennessee and also has taught at Ohio State University.

Sedgwick-Jell earned the bachelor of philosophy degree in U.S. history from Oxford University in England. His teaching duties will include classes in labor history and modern American history. He also will be part of the University Honors Program faculty, in the spring.

Dr. Duke, his wife, Dr. Loraine Duke, and their young son, Nathan, will tour the British Isles extensively during the year. Dr. Loraine Duke, MU associate professor of English, will be on sabbatical leave for the academic year and will be researching late 18th Century feminist radical novelists.

The Mutual Educational Exchange Program was established as part of the Fulbright-Hays Act of 1961.

Staff Council agrees on need for employee concerns survey

The Staff Council met July 30 to discuss several items of business on the agenda. Members agreed that a comprehensive survey to identify specific current concerns shared by employees should be undertaken as soon as possible.

A questionnaire designed to determine concerns shared by a "significant number of staff employees" will be distributed in the near future.

The Council also elected Don Robertson, assistant dean of Student Life, to fill the vacant position in the Administrative/Professional Group.

The recent film seminars on professional development, sponsored by the Staff Council, drew 25 people. According to the Education Committee report, the response from those attending was very positive and the films will be repeated if requested.
