Dr. Kelli Johnson received a grant from the West Virginia Humanities Council to preserve the stories and narratives of African Americans in West Virginia through an oral history project. Tonight she had the privilege of allowing recorders and participants to share their stories and experiences of growing up African American in WV, particularly in the Fairfield neighborhood of Huntington. The hearts of all attendees are forever changed from their powerful stories. You can find more about the oral history project at <https://libguides.marshall.edu/AAH>.
