Joseph Carpenter came from New York in 1746, and took a large river-bottom survey a little below Covington. Tradition states that a first visit was in the spring and that he started a crop of corn. On his return in the fall, he found that a young buffalo had broken through the fence and was trying to relieve the owner of the trouble of harvesting. The poacher was promptly converted into steak. Carpenter came with a large family nearly grown, and he wished them to settle around him. He seems to have been living in 1776. Close by was another Carpenter family, that of a brother, the name of the pioneer appearing to be Solomon. John and Joseph were sons of Joseph, Sr., and Thomas and Jeremiah of Solomon. Two Daughters of Joseph, Sr., Married Jeremiah Seely and John Mann. Of a later generation was Samuel, who died in 1842, leaving six children.

The Joseph Carpenter who came from England as an indentured servant, and lived about seven years with Loftus Pullin, was not related to the other families. He settled in Little Valley about 1790, and reared twelve children.
