MCM
LXVI

The vernal equinox, herald of spring and its associated pagan rites, was appearing two months later than the Roman priests had calculated. To improve the reliability of the calendars of the Empire, Julius Caesar called on the services of the Greek astronomer, Sosigenes, and the Roman, Marcus Fabius. Their solution was the 365-1/4 day year and, to make up for lost time, the creation of a fourteen-month calendar for the year 46 B.C. Julius Caesar's foresight was commemorated by Sosigenes and Fabius, who renamed the seventh month, Quintilis, for their patron.
