DR. CHARLES A. HOFFMAN, M.D.

Dr. Charles “Carl” A. Hoffman was born in Ironton, Ohio, where he first started in medicine working at a local pharmacy. He earned his Bachelor’s in Science from Marshall College (now University) and his doctorate from the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine. Eventually, he settled in Huntington, WV and opened the Hoffman Urological Clinic here in 1944. He would also serve as Marshall University’s University Physician and teach premedical classes.

While working as a physician, Dr. Hoffman was very active in professional organizations. He served as president of the West Virginia State Medical Association in 1957 and founded the American Association of Clinical Urologists, which continues to sponsor the Hoffman Lecture series in his name. The pinnacle of Dr. Hoffman’s career was his election to the presidency of the American Medical Association in 1972. During his one-year term, he led the medical community through national discussions concerning health insurance and medical malpractice. Furthermore, he embarked on a European tour to study how other countries structured their healthcare systems.

Dr. Hoffman recognized that Marshall University needed a medical school, and he played an integral role in that school’s establishment. He and his wife, Lynn, were Charter Members of the John Marshall Society, and Dr. Hoffman was an enthusiastic supporter of Marshall athletics. The school awarded him an Honorary Doctorate of Science in 1972 to recognize his contributions to the Marshall community. Dr. Hoffman died in 1981 in Huntington.
