Abstract:

Papers consist primarily of diaries, newspaper clippings, correspondence, genealogies and photographs of five families: the Glanville-Carter families of St. Louis, Mo.; the Whittakers of Preble Co., Ohio; Dorothy Whittaker Atkins of Huntington, W. Va.; and the Heacocks of Bucks Co., Penna. A significant part of the collection are the diaries of Annie Heacock, a teacher at the Penn School for freed slaves in Beaufort, South Carolina, 1864-1869. Other diaries include the Civil War diary of John Whittaker, a surgeon in the 81st Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Explanatory Notes:

- "Bx" refers to the box in which papers are filed.
- "Fd" refers to the folder.
- "Bk" refers to a book or volume.

CONTENT AND SCOPE OF THE COLLECTION

The Whittaker-Glanville family papers consist of diaries, correspondence, newspaper clippings, genealogies and photographs related to five families--the Glanvilles and Carters of St. Louis, Missouri; the Whittakers of Preble County, Ohio, including Dorothy Whittaker Atkins of Huntington, West Virginia; and the Heacocks of Bucks County, Pennsylvania.

Whittaker family papers comprise the bulk of the collection. John Whittaker (1827-1900) married into the Glanville family while he served as a Methodist minister in St. Louis and in the Missouri circuit before the Civil War. His diaries describe this part of his life and continue intermittently for the next forty years, including his Civil War service. At the outbreak of the War, Whittaker joined the Union Army as a doctor and moved his bride back to Ohio. The diary of Anna Glanville Whittaker (1833-1924) for this period describes her unhappiness as a Secessionist in the North and her concerns with her family.

Another significant part of the collection is the Heacock family material. The diaries (1864-1869) of Annie Heacock (1838-1932) are particularly notable. Annie and her sister Gaynor (1829-1916) travelled from Philadelphia to the South Carolina Sea Islands during the Civil War to teach freed slaves at the Penn School. Included is correspondence from Annie and Gaynor Heacock to Mary Peirce describing their work.

The Glanville-Carter family materials consist primarily of correspondence and notes related to the Glanville genealogy. Included is a journal with entries by William Glanville (1822-1864) in 1856 and his daughter Annie (1856-1940) in 1883, both of whom address their children, born and unborn, with concerns for their future well-being.

The papers of Dorothy Whittaker Atkins, a teacher in Huntington, West Virginia, public schools for many years, contain photographs of her parents, children and grandchildren and correspondence related to the Whittaker family cemetery in Camden, Ohio. There are also genealogical notes, charts, and photoreproductions of family histories related to the Bowles, Glanville, Heacock, and Lounsbery families.
