Osama will force federal contractors to raise minimum wage

By ANITA KUMAR
WASHINGTON... (AP)

A White House official says President Obama will propose a bill to federal contractors that would raise the minimum wage for employees of companies who receive federal contracts with the government to $10.10 an hour.

The move would affect companies that receive millions in federal contracts each year and come after months of pressure from Democratic lawmakers and labor leaders.

The White House said in a statement that Obama plans to formally announce the proposal at a Labor Day event.

The announcement comes as the White House is stepping up efforts to mobilize public support for workers and economic justice.

The official added that the move is part of a broader effort to create jobs and promote economic growth.

The proposal would be the latest in a series of actions by the administration to support workers and their families.

The White House has already taken steps to raise the minimum wage, increase access to affordable health care, and strengthen workers' rights to form unions.

But the $10.10 minimum wage proposal goes further, with the goal of helping low-wage workers and their families.

The official added that the move is part of a broader effort to create jobs and promote economic growth.

HERD TRAMPLES MOREHEAD STATE

By BRAXTON CRISP

The Marshall University Thundering Herd trampled Morehead State University with a 52-21 victory on Saturday night at Joan C. Edwards Stadium in Huntington.

The win propels the Herd from No. 16 to No. 15 in the polls and brings the conference mark to 3-1. The win also gives the Herd the confidence to take on a new foe this weekend, Louisiana-Monroe.

The Thundering Herd dominated the game from the jump. The Herd defense forced three turnovers on the night and held the Eagles to only 11 total first downs.

In contrast, the Marshall offense dominated the game with 522 total yards. The Thundering Herd offense scored on every possession except for their last one of the game. The Herd offense converted 10 consecutive first downs over the last two possessions of the game.

Not too late for influenza vaccines

The 2013-2014 influenza season has been marked as the most dangerous in recent years, yet at the same time there has been a decline in the number of vaccinates distributed. There has been a spike in the number of flu-related deaths across the country with 40 states reporting widespread activity through the week of Jan. 5. That same week, Caleb County reported its first flu-related death for the 2013-2014 season.

Despite this, the number of vaccinates is down. In December, the CDC reported that only 40 percent of American adults had received a flu shot this year. This is down from 45 percent in the 2012-2013 season.

Numerous young children and senior citizens are the two groups of people that are susceptible to flu viruses. Moreover, this season is particularly hard on those in the 25-45 year age range, as this was the case with the death in Caleb County.

The rationale for most, especially young adults, is that the flu is not serious. Therefore, why bother with a vaccine? However this is being disproven through the number of reported illnesses and deaths associated with the flu viruses. It’s more than just the common cold, so it’s important to understand the severity and prevention tactics, especially because the viruses aren’t just targeting children and senior citizens.

Young adults should take control of their health and consider the benefits of receiving a flu vaccine in protecting themselves and others from a potentially life-threatening virus.

The good news is that it’s not too late for preventative vaccinations for this flu season. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s website, flu vaccines are recommended so long as the flu viruses are still circulating, and it’s important to get vaccinated every year.

Smoking is worse than you thought had the brilliant idea to adapt passages of the Book of Ecclesiastes into a song, which is still rings in the songs that young people listen to today. He was past the nastiness of the red scare, not going to answer any questions to testify before a congressional witch hunt. He was a consistent resistor of injustice. The Constitution of the United States guarantees religious beliefs or my political beliefs, or how I vote. He was a master of the five-string banjo. He was a consistent resistor of injustice.

Musicians, activists and Obama remember Pete Seeger

BY AUGUST BROWN
(Marshfield, Mass.) – Pete Seeger’s death at 94 has left a hole in America’s moral conscience. The folk singer was a fixture in major cultural life for the latter half of the 20th century. He was known for performing and speaking in venues ranging from the White House to a Senate committee. A member of President Barack Obama’s 2009 inauguration and during the Occupy Wall Street protests until his death on Monday.

The outpouring of memories and tributes has been overwhelming. This column is inspired by the beautiful and timeless work of Pete Seeger. It is not designed to be a biography but more an exploration of the man and his words through my eyes and ears. I have used similar texts of his, his songs, and the memories of those who had the privilege to know him.

Statistics presented at the hearing by representatives of the fishing industry, as well as a panel of fishermen, concerned that the government is not doing enough to protect the industry from China’s growing fishing fleet. The National Marine Fisheries Service has been criticized for its slow response to the Chinese fleet’s expansion, which is causing significant economic harm to local fishermen.

Owens, the executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, said the court ruling could have “a meaningful impact on federal efforts to ensure that human rights are protected throughout the world.”

Supreme Court decision

The Supreme Court decision was a significant victory for the defense, as it allowed for the release of a key witness in the case. The witness had been in custody for nearly two years, during which time he was subjected to harsh interrogation techniques. The court ruled that the witness’s statements were not voluntary and should be suppressed, effectively ending the prosecution.

The decision has broader implications for the criminal justice system, as it limits the government’s ability to use coerced confessions in court. It also highlights the importance of protecting the rights of those accused of crimes, even in cases where the evidence seems strong.

The case involves a man named John Doe, who was arrested and charged with murder. During his interrogation, law enforcement officers used a variety of tactics to extract a confession, including threats of violence and promises of leniency. The court ruled that these tactics were improper and that the confession should be suppressed.

The decision has implications for other cases involving similar tactics, as it sets a precedent for how law enforcement officers can interact with suspects. It also underscores the importance of ensuring that suspects are treated fairly and justly, even in cases where the evidence seems strong.

The decision is a significant victory for the defense and for the rights of those accused of crimes. It also highlights the importance of protecting the rights of suspects, even in cases where the evidence seems strong.
Being generous of spirit is a wonderful way to live.
