System of Arrangement: The collection was grouped into eight series: Series I - Personal, Series II - Business, Series III - Legal, Series IV - Railroad, Series V - Land and Minerals, Series VI - Eli Thayer, Series VII - Watertown Musket and Series VIII - Miscellaneous. Oversized documents have been boxed separately from their original series however their separate boxes display the correct series number.

In addition to a finding aid, also included in this document is an item level inventory of the Stark-Hoard materials created when the items were donated to Special Collections. The item-level inventory does not map directly to any particular folder and is being made available for reference only.

This collection was a gift from The Stark Family.

SCOPE AND CONTENT OF THE COLLECTION

Charles Brooks Hoard, known as C. B. Hoard within the collection, served in the New York State Assembly from 1837-1838, was Jefferson County Clerk from 1844-1846, and was elected to represent the State of New York in the United States House of Representatives from 1857-1861. During the American Civil War, Hoard attempted to patent the Watertown Musket and was contracted by the federal government to manufacture the muskets for the war effort.

C. B. Hoard partnered with Eli Thayer in the development of Ceredo, Virginia, now Ceredo, West Virginia. Thayer, who had hopes of establishing a colony in Ceredo to prove the superiority of free labor in comparison to slave labor, borrowed money from Hoard to help found the colony. After Thayer ran into financial hardships, he signed over his Ceredo properties to C. B. Hoard in order to repay Hoard for the initial loan. In 1869 Hoard relocated to Ceredo, soon followed by his sons, Pitt and S. Floyd Hoard.

Hoard, after his move to Ceredo, began writing to railroad tycoon Collis P. Huntington, the namesake of Huntington, WV, asking him to purchase some land in Ceredo in order to have Huntington's C&O Railroad come through the town. After some business dealings with Huntington fell through (as a result of the city of Huntington replacing the importance of Ceredo), Hoard began to start new businesses in the area; most notably, the Ceredo Mineral and Railway Company (never completed), which he remained president of until his death in 1886.

The bulk of the collection contains correspondence, manuscripts, maps, blueprints, contracts, deeds, court cases, and other materials relating to the founding of Ceredo. There are some materials, such as fossils, artifacts, and other items that have been housed in separate boxes. The materials are dated from the early 1820s through the mid-late 20th century, and relate directly to the Stark-Hoard Family, their businesses, land holdings, dealings with Eli Thayer, and legal cases. Oversized materials, such as maps and blueprints, have been housed separately and their location is noted in the finding aid.

CHARLES BROOKS HOARD (1805-1886)

Born in Springfield, Vermont on either June 5th or 28th, 1805, Charles Brooks Hoard, also known as Charles B. or C. B. Hoard, was one of many sons to Samuel Hoard and Deborah Bigelow (other sons were named Silvius, Samuel, Daniel, Francis and George). The family name 'Hoard' was originally 'Hoar/e', but the sons began using the 'Hoard' spelling during the War of 1812. Sometime after Charles's birth, it appears that Samuel was remarried to a Deborah Holden. Ezra S. Holden, born to Deborah Holden, became a stepbrother to the Hoard brothers.

In 1821 at the age of 16, Charles moved to Antwerp, New York (located in Jefferson County), where he served as a postmaster. In 1844 he moved to Watertown, NY, also located in Jefferson County, where he married Susan Heate in 1828. Active in politics, C. B. Hoard served as a member of the New York State Assembly for Jefferson County from 1837-38, as Jefferson County Clerk from 1844-46 and represented New York's 23rd District in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1857-61. Originally a Democrat, he later identified with the Free Soil Party and the Barnburner movements before his anti-slavery views ultimately led him into the arms of the Republican Party that was founded in 1854.

While serving in these various political positions, C. B. Hoard entered into a partnership with Gilbert Bradford, specifically in the late 1840's and their firm, Hoard & Bradford, became a successful manufacturing firm of portable steam engines to operate printing presses and other like machines. During this venture Hoard became acquainted with Horace Greeley, the famous newspaperman from the N.Y. Tribune and Jon. H. Haddock of Haddock's printing office. This latter associate became a good friend of Hoard's and Hoard would keep many of Haddock's articles printed in newspapers while Haddock would go on to write short memorial biographies in honor of C. B. Hoard. After four years, Hoard bought out Bradford's interest in the business. The business would be changed to "Hoard and Son", where Hoard's two sons, Pitt and Norwood would be partners. Another son, Samuel Floyd Hoard or S. Floyd Hoard, would also become a partner later on. By 1858 the business grew employing approximately 140 workers.

During his tenure in the U.S. Congress, Hoard partnered with Eli Thayer for the purpose of developing a town in northwestern Virginia along the Ohio River, which came to be known as Ceredo, West Virginia. Eli Thayer was also a member of the House of Representatives and a Republican for the 9th District of Massachusetts. Before entering Congress, Thayer set out to 'colonize' the then Kansas Territory starting at 1854 by establishing and financing the Massachusetts Emigrant Aid Company whose purpose was to settle as many anti-slave and abolitionist New Englanders in order to secure Kansas's statehood into the Union as a free State. Later joined by the New York Emigrant Aid Company, the two companies unified into the New England Emigrant Aid Company. This rush of Free-Staters would ultimately clash with pro-slave emigrants and shepherd in the Bleeding Kansas conflict that raged from 1854-1861. Despite the violence, Thayer sought to colonize northwestern Virginia also with anti-slave New Englanders alongside freed blacks to create an anti-slave colony. The goal was to prove such a colony and group of people can exist and co-exist and to prove the South can still grow and develop as a region without slavery. C. B. Hoard loaned money to Thayer to help purchase land after Thayer and his associates mortgaged the town site and adjoining lands.

A few years after granting Thayer the loan, the Civil War broke out and either by not seeking reelection or not winning a reelection bid, Hoard left Congress in 1861 and became engaged in the manufacturing of muskets for the Union Army, while also supplying bayonets and small arms, such as the Freeman .44 cal. percussion revolver. The musket venture began in June of 1862 after signing two contracts, agreeing to make 25,000 muskets for each contract at $20 apiece, and totaling $1,000,000. There was a previous contract signed by President Abraham Lincoln's first Secretary of War Simon Cameron for 1,000 muskets in 1861, but Cameron resigned after a scandal and the contract fell through. The 1862 contracts came under the preview of the new Secretary of War, Edwin Stanton. On December 1, 1863, a contract was signed between C. B. Hoard and his son Pitt with the Government's Ordnance Department for 20,000 muskets for $19 apiece. What was unclear was as to whether this one-dollar difference was a revision of the 1862 contracts. Delays caused the first delivery of the promised muskets until 1864 while the Northern Government was able to increase its own capacity of production at the Springfield Armory in Massachusetts. Two Springfield-made models were shipped to Hoard to serve as patterns for his own muskets during the 2-year delay. At the end of 1863, the Government approved the muskets made by Hoard, but not the bayonets. Apparently, Secretary Stanton did not seek to grant a full fulfillment of his contract with Hoard for one reason or another. In inspecting some of the muskets, inspectors of an unfriendly nature, were highly critical of Hoard's Watertown Muskets, with these inspectors picking apart and keeping good parts themselves. Upset, Hoard would combine his parts and the Government's only to have them labeled as "condemned". Ultimately, Hoard was never able to satisfy Stanton and the contracts became financially disastrous, causing Hoard to cease production. He was forced to sell off machinery and at any price he could obtain. In the end Hoard took a loss, which cost nearly his whole fortune. The main buyer of the Watertown Musket manufacturing business was the Turkish Empire.

During the war, the land secured by Thayer remained undeveloped. Following the war's end, Thayer himself ran into financial troubles from 1866-67. Not being able to repay the loan to Hoard, Thayer signed a quit-claim to Hoard on all property in Ceredo. As late as 1869, Hoard moved to Ceredo, West Virginia (northwestern Virginia seceded from Virginia and became a free-state on the Union side in 1863), followed by his two sons Pitt and S. Floyd in the 1870s.

Following a fire that broke out in the Ceredo courthouse, original street maps were destroyed in 1869. While trying to lay out the streets for Ceredo, the loss of maps caused confusion and C.B. Hoard was later accused of condemning some land to keep it unoccupied for his own purposes. This was the first of many legal troubles for the Hoards after arriving in Ceredo.

In 1870, Hoard contacted Collis P. Huntington urging him to purchase some Ceredo property so that the Chesapeake and Ohio (C&O) Railroad would come through the area. By 1873, an agreement was struck between the two. Despite an agreement to build permanent passenger and freight depots in Ceredo, in 1878 Huntington seemed to have changed his mind and pulled out of the agreement with Hoard. This decision had a devastating effect on Ceredo's growth while Collis P. Huntington went on to establish his own city that would bear his name, Huntington, near Ceredo in West Virginia. Hoard then tried negotiating rights-of-way of a different path to Ceredo, but Huntington went south of Ceredo, not through it. The Hoards and Huntington, and his C&O Railway would face off in decades of long legal battles.

The Hoards established a cemetery, known as the Hoard-Baldwin Cemetery; only to be charged with building it for the purpose of blocking the efforts of the C&O to go around the town. Soon after, the body of a "Mrs. Bush" was, as accused by Hoard, moved by the C&O to enable the tracks to continue to go around. Evidently, under the guise of nighttime during a litigation trial, tracks were laid where the body was once located allowing it to connect with the tracks leading to Huntington. Unable to gain the favor of the court, mostly due to the influence of Huntington, Hoard would still fight on until 1883. At this time Huntington ordered Hoard to cease litigation or the tracks near Ceredo would cease to exist. Taking this to the U.S. Supreme Court and being rejected, Hoard gave in and withdrew his opposition. His son, S. Floyd Hoard, was able to negotiate a title to construct a passenger station and depot in Ceredo.

While dealing with the C&O, Charles B. Hoard and later his sons, would seek agreements with other railroads such as the Baltimore and Ohio, The Norfolk and Western, the Mobile and Ohio, and others.

In the 1870's, C. B. Hoard tried to expand Ceredo's economy by developing the timber and mineral industry. He would serve as President of the Ceredo Mineral and Railway Company from 1871 until his death.

Charles B. Hoard died on November 20, 1886 in Ceredo. He was later interred in Spring Hill Cemetery in Huntington, W.V.

The Hoard Family would be joined with the Stark Family when the daughter of Pitt Hoard, Julia, married Henry J. Stark in Ceredo in 1910. Two sons and a daughter would be born through this marriage: Pitt Hoard Stark, Floyd Hoard Stark and Julia Ann Stark.

Through the union of Pitt Hoard to Julia Thompson of Saratoga Springs, N.Y., the collection also includes letters, poems and articles from the Thompson Family, specifically Julia, her brother Peter, and some other relatives. The poems, printed in a Saratoga Springs newspaper along with others announcing the departure of one Peter Thompson from New York to Ceredo, indicates that Julia's father and brother share the name Peter.

In 1879, it appears that a brother of Henry J. Stark, James Stark, married Augusta Jacobs. This union helps to explain why various letters and charts of the Jacobs family are found alongside those of the Stark family.

Included are some genealogies of the Warnocks and Roberts/Robertsons with the Hoard/Stark/Jacobs genealogies.

PROCESSING NOTES

When the collection was received by the University, some of it was in such physical disrepair that it was not possible to save it. Insect and water damage, as well as mold, made some of the documents unusable. Most of the documents in the collection were folded, and had been for several decades. One of the challenges faced was getting the documents flattened to store in folders. Once the materials had been flattened, those too large for folders were placed in oversized containers with paper separating individual document sets.

Many items in the collection were fastened together with paper clips, staples, or even straight pins. In order to prevent further rust and damage to the documents, all metals were removed. In order to keep the documents together, folded sheets of paper were placed around sets to denote their relatedness.

The collection was in no particular order when received, and once clear, distinct series were identified, the collection was separated accordingly. Some of the documents in the collection are difficult to read, either due to handwriting, fading, and/or age. Newspaper articles and clippings have been photocopied to ensure the survival of the information they contain, but the newspapers themselves were in too poor condition to keep.

* Ezra S. Holden addresses C.B. Hoard as “brother” in these two letters. It appears he was a half brother, as mentioned in the second letter.

 These letters from Deborah Holden are signed “your affectionate mother”

 Confidential proposal for Hoard to set up committee regarding slavery in western states.

^ The only difference in these two contracts appears to be the schedule for delivery of different quantities on different dates.

Letters show C. B. had five brothers: Samuel or Sam Hoard, Francis, Daniel, George, and Ezra L. Holden.

Several letters from 1830's from Sam to C. B. were sent from Fort Covington, N.Y. where the brothers owned a store.
