Peer Review

The reputation of the Marshall Journal of Medicine depends on the contribution of authors; however, the Journal's standard of excellence is also a consequence of the efforts of expert peer reviewers. We are grateful to the more than 530 individual reviewers who have contributed to the success of our Journal and enhanced the quality of 260 published papers. It is impossible to overstate the importance of their labor in ensuring both the quality and relevance of work published in the Journal. On behalf of the Marshall Journal of Medicine editorial board, I want to express my sincere gratitude to the reviewers for assessing manuscripts.

The Marshall Journal of Medicine follows a double-blind peer-review process, where the identities of both the authors and reviewers are not disclosed to avoid any biases. Committing to reviewing a manuscript is an industrious task, requiring careful reading, analysis, and the ability to provide constructive feedback. We appreciate the contribution of reviewers who have dedicated their valuable time and efforts to review the assigned manuscripts.

The Journal has taken several new steps to thank and acknowledge reviewers. Along with annual acknowledgment on the Journal website, reviewers will now receive a letter of recognition after the article is published. Additionally, reviewers are entitled to an official reviewer certificate from the editorial team upon reviewing five manuscripts. The act of reviewing is primarily unseen, behind-the-scenes work, and we are so appreciative of our skillful volunteers who undertake this task.
