Biographical Notes:

James "Jim" R. Shephard was in the intelligence division contained within the U.S. Army Engineers, Geodesy, Intelligence, and Mapping Research and Development Agency, Intelligence Division in Fort Belvoir, Virginia. He was a Huntington, West Virginia resident.

Scope and Content:

This collection is primarily composed of aerial reconnaissance photographs of ballistic missile bases taken during and immediately after the Cuban Missile Crisis in October and November, 1962. These photographs feature extensive captions and labels that became part of the report, "Cuba Know, Yankee See! A Picture Story with an Object Lesson: Castro had his 10,000 words, but we got the picture." and was used as part of a Department of Defense Special Cuba Briefing by Robert S. McNamara in February 1963. Other less significant portions of the collection include construction reports on the Thule Air Base in Thule, Greenland (the United States Armed Forces' northernmost installation) and a World War II era handbook on China, including language lessons focusing on military vocabulary and culture, and a press photo from NASA in 1965.
