Dr. Michael L. Cunningham, professor of leadership studies at Marshall until his retirement in 2016, died Saturday, May 25.

Cunningham began his career as a science teacher at Elkview Junior High School, then transitioned to administration as assistant principal, then principal, at Clendenin Middle School. He played a key role in changing the junior high to a middle school, helping to create a path for other schools to follow.

He began teaching at the West Virginia Graduate College (which is now a part of Marshall) as an adjunct professor in 1993 and was appointed a full-time assistant professor in 1996. He served as program director in leadership studies beginning in 1999 and continuing until his retirement.

As a professor in the doctoral program, he was well known for his mentoring and persistence in helping doctoral candidates complete their dissertations. He received the John and Frances Rucker Graduate Advisor of the Year award in 2011.

A memorial service will be held this Saturday, June 1, at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in Elkview at 11 a.m. Visitation will be held an hour before the service.

A team of Marshall University faculty members presented research at the annual National Association of Social Workers West Virginia (NASW WV) conference May 3.

The presentation was based on information uncovered in the dissertation research of Dr. Kim White, assistant professor of social work at Marshall.

“The panel arose from my dissertation research where I interviewed six physicians who prescribe Suboxone to patients with Opioid Use Disorder to understand their perspectives on the practice from a strengths-based framework. I asked three Marshall faculty and two of the physicians from the study to co-present with me at the conference to make a cross-disciplinary case for the use of Medication Assisted Treatment (MAT),” White said.

The NASW WV conference is the largest state chapter conference in the nation, with over 1500 registrants from all over the east coast. Learn more about research initiatives in the Department of Social Work by visiting www.marshall.edu/social-work.

Dr. Victor Fet, professor of biological sciences, received a travel grant from the Oxford University Museum of Natural History in Oxford, U.K., (shown at left) and spent three weeks while on sabbatical leave, working on zoological collections accumulated over 150 years. The museum was founded by Prince Albert (Queen Victoria’s consort) in 1860, and immediately housed the historical debate on Darwin’s evolution theory between Thomas Huxley and the Rev. Samuel Wilberforce, the Bishop of Oxford. See https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1860_Oxford_evolution_debate.
Women’s soccer team to host youth camps for youth of both sexes

Marshall’s women’s soccer team will present soccer camps for young people beginning Monday, June 17.

The camps are designed for players interested in learning what it takes to play soccer at the next level and to get younger players interested in playing soccer. It will put players in a training environment similar to a college setting, with the ultimate goal of players enjoying their experience within the game.

Players will train with Marshall University coaches. Demonstrations and game play feature the correct technical methods and enable players to recreate those skills in game scenarios.
