The Parthenon, July 22, 2016

Lexi Browning
Parthenon@marshall.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://mds.marshall.edu/parthenon

Recommended Citation
http://mds.marshall.edu/parthenon/617

This Newspaper is brought to you for free and open access by the University Archives at Marshall Digital Scholar. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Parthenon by an authorized administrator of Marshall Digital Scholar. For more information, please contact zhangj@marshall.edu, martj@marshall.edu.
By KARIMA NEGHMouCHE

LIFE EDITOR

Last October, the Cabell County successfully received a grant to launch the Women’s Empowerment and Addiction Recovery Program (WEAR), a program tailored for women recovering from serious addictions in the Huntington area.

The program currently has eight women, with a maximum enrollment of 20, and is generally an 18-month program with four phases and an aftercare program.

Depending on how successful the women are in each phase, they can move in and out of the program.

While the women found comfort in knowing each other’s stories and pasts, they also knew one thing—no story is the same.

Salena, whose last name is being excluded for confidential reasons, has been in the WEAR program for approximately 10 weeks.

She and three other WEAR members attended a group hike and ice cream social at the Huntington Museum of Art Tuesday, organized by female volunteers in the community who aim to assist and support the women in their recoveries.

She said she has learned so much from being in the program, and that it has changed her life so much in such a short amount of time.

Salena said she has become a more positive person and has become passionate about her recovery.

Salena said she couldn’t do it alone, and has everyone that has helped her through her recovery to thank, including her probation officer, Lauren, who she sees in her support system.

“Being in this program has saved my life. Without this help, I would’ve been dead or in prison,” Salena said: “They’ve not only given me sobriety, they’re not giving up on me.”

Salena said that naturally, she wasn’t excited about going into the program. She felt many emotions, including fear of change and anger towards others and herself.

“It was hard to have to leave that drug life, it was hard to leave your friends, hard to know what you knew,” Salena said. “It’s what I was used to. I did what I needed to do to get the next fix, whatever it was. But, you have to completely separate yourself to get any better. I’m very proud of myself, and I couldn’t have said that before.”

After gaining the strength to get away from her past, the first time, Salena relapsed, which she described as the worst moment of her life.

“Fourteen months in jail, I came out, was thrown back into the world, and... I knew drugs were there, I knew where to get it. I thought to myself ‘just one more time,’ but I thought too many times,” Salena said.

Salena said she didn’t want until that moment, when she truly had her wake up call, and realized she never wanted to touch drugs again.

Amy, another woman in the program, agreed that she had to have a wake-up call, and it’s not always a positive one.

“Sometimes you need enough time before you want to change,” Amy said. “I don’t believe in rock bottom anymore; you have to change. If you rock bottom, I would be dead.”

Salena, like others in the program, finds her motivation in herself, her children, and in her parents.

She said her father told her she had new life before he passed—and it was to see her sober, which makes her want to strive harder and do better.

After finishing her recovery, Salena wants to go back to school, have a home, a job, and feel like she has her life back.

For now, Salena is looking forward to the future. Karima Neghmouche can be contacted at negh ouche2@marshall.edu.

WEAR program participants explore the outdoors at the HMoA

By DARIA HEDMOUCHE

LIFE EDITOR

Last October, the Cabell County successfully received a grant to launch the Women’s Empowerment and Addiction Recovery Program (WEAR), a program tailored for women recovering from serious addictions in the Huntington area.

The program currently has eight women, with a maximum enrollment of 20, and is generally an 18-month program with four phases and an aftercare program.

Depending on how successful the women are in each phase, they can move in and out of the program.

While the women found comfort in knowing each other’s stories and pasts, they also knew one thing—no story is the same.

Salena, whose last name is being excluded for confidential reasons, has been in the WEAR program for approximately 10 weeks.

She and three other WEAR members attended a group hike and ice cream social at the Huntington Museum of Art Tuesday, organized by female volunteers in the community who aim to assist and support the women in their recoveries.

She said she has learned so much from being in the program, and that it has changed her life so much in such a short amount of time. Salena said she has become a more positive person and has become passionate about her recovery.

Salena said she couldn’t do it alone, and has everyone that has helped her through her recovery to thank, including her probation officer, Lauren, who she sees in her support system.

“Being in this program has saved my life. Without this help, I would’ve been dead or in prison,” Salena said. “They’ve not only given me sobriety, they’re not giving up on me.”

Salena said that naturally, she wasn’t excited about going into the program. She felt many emotions, including fear of change and anger towards others and herself.

“It was hard to have to leave that drug life, it was hard to leave your friends, hard to know what you knew,” Salena said. “It’s what I was used to. I did what I needed to do to get the next fix, whatever it was. But, you have to completely separate yourself to get any better. I’m very proud of myself, and I couldn’t have said that before.”

After gaining the strength to get away from her past the first time, Salena relapsed, which she described as the worst moment of her life.

“Fourteen months in jail, I came out, was thrown back into the world, and... I knew drugs were there, I knew where to get it. I thought to myself ‘just one more time,’ but I thought too many times,” Salena said.

Salena said she didn’t want until that moment, when she truly had her wake up call, and realized she never wanted to touch drugs again.

Amy, another woman in the program, agreed that she had to have a wake-up call, and it’s not always a positive one.

“Sometimes you need enough time before you want to change,” Amy said. “I don’t believe in rock bottom anymore; you have to change. If you rock bottom, I would be dead.”

Salena, like others in the program, finds her motivation in herself, her children, and in her parents.

She said her father told her she had new life before he passed—and it was to see her sober, which makes her want to strive harder and do better.

After finishing her recovery, Salena wants to go back to school, have a home, a job, and feel like she has her life back.

For now, Salena is looking forward to the future. Karima Neghmouche can be contacted at negh ouche2@marshall.edu.
Cycling for charity: Gilbert goes along for the ride

President Jerome Gilbert will join the Training Wheels to assist individuals with disabilities in learning to ride a two-wheel bicycle on Friday through the College of Health Professions and the iCanShine non-profit charity.

Gilbert, an avid cyclist, will join the event and volunteer opportunities. Volunteers are requested for the 11:40 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. and 2 p.m. to 3:15 p.m. sessions and are advised to show up 15 minutes prior to the session and wear clothing suitable for walking or running.

For more information about the event and volunteer opportunities, contact Liz Casse, Ph.D., program director of the Department of Health Sciences in the College of Health Professions at casseyd@marshall.edu.

SEASON SCHEDULE:

04/29: Tony Bennett
06/10: Lewis Black
10/21: Gavin DeGraw/Andy Grammer
10/27-30: International Fall Film Fest.
11/09: RENT
11/17: Nelson Mandela Metro Choir
12/08: Wynonna Mershes "Big Berel Holiday"

W.Va. Chamber offers grants for flood-hit businesses

Republican Presidential Candidate Donald Trump looks at his wife Melania as she waves to the delegates following speech gaffe. "I think she's going to get a wonderful reception," said Georgia delegate Donna Rowe. "We all understand it was a mistake, and they owned up to it. I’m ready to move on." Mrs. Trump gave a moving speech to the convention Monday night, highlighting a personal side of her husband giving his acceptance speech, perhaps the biggest speech of his very public life.

Delegates to the convention said they expect Mrs. Trump to get a warm reception. "I think she’s going to get a wonderful reception," said Georgia delegate Donna Rowe. "We all understand it was a mistake, and they owned up to it. I’m ready to move on."

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Almost immediately, social media went ballistic, comparing with charges of plagiarity and videos of the two speeches side-by-side. The Trump campaign spent two days denying there was any plagiarism, calling the criticism absurd. Finally, on Wednesday, a spokesperson for Trump’s company issued a statement saying she was to blame. "We all understand it was a mistake, and they owned up to it. I’m ready to move on."

Melania Trump returns to convention following speech gaffe.

President Jerome Gilbert will join the Training Wheels to assist individuals with disabilities in learning to ride a two-wheel bicycle on Friday through the College of Health Professions and the iCanShine non-profit charity.

Gilbert, an avid cyclist, will join the event and volunteer opportunities. Volunteers are requested for the 11:40 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. and 2 p.m. to 3:15 p.m. sessions and are advised to show up 15 minutes prior to the session and wear clothing suitable for walking or running.

For more information about the event and volunteer opportunities, contact Liz Casse, Ph.D., program director of the Department of Health Sciences in the College of Health Professions at casseyd@marshall.edu.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The West Virginia Chamber of Commerce is offering grants to small businesses hurt by last month’s devastating floods. Chamber attorney Parwen Masci tells The State Journal that the chamber has collected more than $300,000 for the impacted businesses. Masci says the small grants would provide businesses immediate aid that does not need to be paid back, unlike some state and federal loan options.

The June 23 floods killed 25 people and ranged homes, businesses, roads and other infrastructure.
FRIDAY, JULY 22, 2016

LIFE!

DAILY GRIND

By KARIMA NEGHMOUCHE

Brendan Fenn, owner and operator of Grindstone Coffeeology, described his business as similar to an ice-cream truck for adults—or, at least that's what they like to call themselves.

While millions of people wait in a line in their local coffee shop for their daily caffeine fix, in Huntington, W.V., coffee options can be limited by time or geographic constraints.

Last August, Australian couple Brendan and Helen Fenn moved across the globe to Huntington and immediately realized how different the coffee culture was compared to their native country.

At home, they said, they could walk down the block and see a variety of different coffee shops. Here, however, they lacked options, especially by the Ritter Park area. This inspired them to branch out of their daily jobs and do something different—open up a mobile coffee truck.

Their inspiration came from both their love (and need) for their daily coffee, and the lack thereof in Huntington. This inspired them to branch out of their daily jobs and do something different—open up a mobile coffee truck.

Once the idea of a mobile coffee truck popped into Brendan Fenn's head, he spent countless hours researching, trying to find a suitable truck.

After a streak of no luck, Fenn got frustrated and decided to go for a drive in Huntington. On his drive, he passed a truck sitting in a parking lot by 3rd Avenue. Fenn's wife, Helen, had experience working with coffee from working in various cafes in Australia.

"This was the perfect track, and it was in Huntington. It's like the universe was telling me—ok, this is it, you need to sell coffee," Fenn said.

After getting the truck, Fenn did the design work for it himself, with the ability to do so with his architecture degree he had received in Australia. Grindstone Coffeeology opened this past Memorial Day, and Fenn said the business has been well-received, and their Facebook proves it.

Their page, Grindstone Coffeeology, received more than 900 likes in the past six weeks. In the future, Fenn plans to replicate the truck to expand his business in other places in Huntington.

Grindstone Coffeeology's truck can be found parked beside Ritter Park near the fountain every Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 10 a.m., downtown on 8th Street on Tuesday and Thursday from 10:15 a.m. to 11 a.m., at Frontier Offices on 6th Avenue on Tuesday and Thursday from 11 a.m. to 11:45 a.m. and at Marshall University by Old Main on Hal Greer Boulevard Monday through Friday from 12:30 p.m. to 4 p.m.

While the menu's options are plentiful, varying from lattes, espressos and cappuccinos, Fenn said his favorite is a Flat White, a coffee beverage that originated in Australia.

Although Grindstone is always on the move, the Fenns can be reached on Instagram at @GrindstoneCoffeeology or through their Facebook page. www.facebook.com/GrindstoneCoffeeology.

Karima Neghmouche can be contacted at neghmouche2@marshall.edu.
The Problem with Shrugging off Melania Trump’s Plagiarism

COLUMN by LEXI BROWNING

In the midst of the Republican National Convention in Cleveland, Ohio, Melania Trump, potential future First Lady of The United States, delivered her first publicized speech about her husband’s candidacy on prime-time television.

In a Los Angeles coffee shop across the streets, recently laid-off journalist Jarrett Hill noticed an unlikely trend in Trump’s exhuberant speeches. Trump’s phrasing sounded familiar. A little too familiar.

Like a good journalist, Hill immediately did research on the phrasing, and upon further review, noticed Trump had recycled—verbatim—paragraphs of First Lady Michelle Obama’s 2008 Democratic National Convention speech.

Hill began tweeting the similarities, which were quickly mainstreamed and picked up by major news outlets. The responses from Twitter varied. “Typo, pathetic,” said Mya Doris posted. “Shame on Melania,” wrote Randi Anders. “Can’t blame you Mrs. Obama. She’s brilliant!” Others drew parallels between the political speeches are eerily original.

“Good lord, a few words out of a speech” wrote another “Let’s not make her out to be Joe Biden.”

Overall, the Trump campaign, in its strides toward the Oval Office, has come across arrogant and sometimes-caricature— which can be an obvious dis service to the prestige of the presidential position.

In addition, Trump has made a habit of converting his component’s/philosophers instead of strengthening efficient plans for managing international relations and internal affairs. This tendency is fraught of serious matters is alarming. If NATO is truly allied, how will they respond? What if it’s us? Will we have our breasts and decades of frustration? How isolated will we become from the rest of the world with this self-only-owned attitude?

In comparison to the rest of Trump’s campaign, not claiming responsibility immediately for the plagiarism sparked even more controversy. The former “Apprentice” reality star is known for firing employees, and it seemed natural to speculate he was next searching for someone to blame.

Then Wednesday, a letter was released by the Trump campaign, typed on official Trump stationary. A young speechwriter named Meredith McIver emerged from the shadows, taking full blame for Melania Trump’s plagiarized speech.

“Working with Melania Trump on her First Lady speech, we discussed many people who inspired her and messages she wanted to share,” wrote McIver. A person she has always liked in Michelle Obama. Over the phone, she read me some passages from Mrs. Obama’s speech as examples. I wrote them down and later included some of the phrasing in the draft that ultimately became the final speech. I did not check Mrs. Obama’s speeches.” The day after the plagiarism was discovered, Huffington Post satirically shared a photo of Melania, plastered with various famous quotes from American history with each quotation attributed to Trump.

The memes can be humorous, and I will be the first to admit a few of them made me giggle, but it’s also alarming for all who value the field of journalism.

At Marshall University, one of the most thriving exper iences of college is Syllabus Week. As students, we return from summer break with a handful of new classes, new professors, and a supply of enthusiasm for the new chapter ahead.

Assignments are rare, and we have the opportunity to engage with new professors and classmates and connect with our campus organizations. During the introductory process, professors reiterate the university’s plagiarism policy, a statute that strictly defines the rules of academic integrity.

For those of us who fall in a category with Hermione Granger (or Harry Potter), the threat of expulsion is a fear worse than most. If academic dishonesty is so vile that college students can be expelled from their universities for committing the crime, why should Melania not be held to a similar caliber as the rest of her American counterparts? Does this model work for the future of academia? Brushing off Melania’s plagiarization, whether she or a designated speechwriter lifted the content, presents the idea that it’s acceptable to take the easy way out.

In the field of journalism, credibility is everything. We are hired or fired based on our abilities to produce quality content and conduct ourselves with integrity.

When we fail to do so, we make total jerks of ourselves and others. and often lose the reputation we worked so diligently to earn.

If those of us in the media profession shrugged off Melan ia’s plagiarism and treated it as casually as the campaign, would our audience question our reliability? I think so.

Being accountable is a trait necessary for success in journalism and politics alike— regardless of your last name.

Lexi Browning can be con tacted at lbrowning@marshall.edu.
Cruz: Not supporting candidate who wages personal attacks

Associated Press

A black therapist says police shot him with his hands raised

Associated Press

A black therapist who was trying to calm an autistic patient in the middle of the street says he was shot by police even though he had his hands in the air and repeatedly told them that no one was armed.

The moments before and after the shooting were recorded on cell phone video and released to local media. The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The video released by WSVN, a Miami TV station, was released after his son, Janelle Monae, Kelly Rowland, Grammy-winner Diane Warren and Lea Michele and Zendaya. It was a musical joyride for the first lady and Corden, who was taped last month.

When was the last time you took your hands up? Corden asked.

“This is a real treat!” she said.

“A real treat!” Corden said.

“The first lady and Corden played the Constitution and the GOP nominee on his victory. But the closest Cruz came to saying he wanted Trump to win the White House was when he said: “I want to see the principles that our party believes in prevail in November”.

Cruz did not envision a crowd that he plans to vote for Trump. Nor did he ask his supporters, hundreds of whom encouraged him to run for president in four years at an event on Wednesday in Des Moines, to vote for the newly minted Republican nominee. Interrogated by duets of “Trump, Trump, Trump,” Cruz paused and said with a smile, “I appreciate the enthusiasm of the New York delegation.”

“Is For My Girls,” a “girl power” song, was taped last month. The video posted on websites does not include the moment of the shooting.

“I’m not in the habit of supporting anyone who wages personal attacks on me or my family,” he said.

The language of disunity was the day before. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general.

“Understood what the responsibilities are,” he said.

“Why do we have elections?”

“Agnostic about Donald Trump”

Is AGRARIAN? | Associated Press

The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the police officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The delegates responded with angry boos, and Cruz backed up his former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who said Cruz should not support the convention floor as she was shot to death during a traffic stop. Cellphone videos captured shooting’s killing and aftermath of Charlotte’s shooting, prompting nationwide protests over the treatment of the black community.

“There’s a thin line between”

“Black therapist says police shot him with his hands raised”

Associated Press

A black therapist who was trying to calm an autistic patient in the middle of the street says he was shot by police even though he had his hands in the air and repeatedly told them that no one was armed.

The moments before and after the shooting were recorded on cell phone video and released to local media. The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The video released by WSVN, a Miami TV station, was released after his son, Janelle Monae, Kelly Rowland, Grammy-winner Diane Warren and Lea Michele and Zendaya. It was a musical joyride for the first lady and Corden, who was taped last month.

When was the last time you took your hands up? Corden asked.

“This is a real treat!” she said.

“Sir, there’s no need for firearms,” Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him.

“I’m not in the habit of supporting anyone who wages personal attacks on me or my family,” he said.

The language of disunity was the day before. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general.

“Understood what the responsibilities are,” he said.

“Why do we have elections?”

“Agnostic about Donald Trump”

Is AGRARIAN? | Associated Press

The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the police officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The delegates responded with angry boos, and Cruz backed up his former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who said Cruz should not support the convention floor as she was shot to death during a traffic stop. Cellphone videos captured shooting’s killing and aftermath of Charlotte’s shooting, prompting nationwide protests over the treatment of the black community.

“There’s a thin line between”

“Black therapist says police shot him with his hands raised”

Associated Press

A black therapist who was trying to calm an autistic patient in the middle of the street says he was shot by police even though he had his hands in the air and repeatedly told them that no one was armed.

The moments before and after the shooting were recorded on cell phone video and released to local media. The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The video released by WSVN, a Miami TV station, was released after his son, Janelle Monae, Kelly Rowland, Grammy-winner Diane Warren and Lea Michele and Zendaya. It was a musical joyride for the first lady and Corden, who was taped last month.

When was the last time you took your hands up? Corden asked.

“This is a real treat!” she said.

“Sir, there’s no need for firearms,” Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him.

“I’m not in the habit of supporting anyone who wages personal attacks on me or my family,” he said.

The language of disunity was the day before. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general.

“Understood what the responsibilities are,” he said.

“Why do we have elections?”

“Agnostic about Donald Trump”

Is AGRARIAN? | Associated Press

The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the police officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The delegates responded with angry boos, and Cruz backed up his former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who said Cruz should not support the convention floor as she was shot to death during a traffic stop. Cellphone videos captured shooting’s killing and aftermath of Charlotte’s shooting, prompting nationwide protests over the treatment of the black community.

“There’s a thin line between”

“Black therapist says police shot him with his hands raised”

Associated Press

A black therapist who was trying to calm an autistic patient in the middle of the street says he was shot by police even though he had his hands in the air and repeatedly told them that no one was armed.

The moments before and after the shooting were recorded on cell phone video and released to local media. The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The video released by WSVN, a Miami TV station, was released after his son, Janelle Monae, Kelly Rowland, Grammy-winner Diane Warren and Lea Michele and Zendaya. It was a musical joyride for the first lady and Corden, who was taped last month.

When was the last time you took your hands up? Corden asked.

“This is a real treat!” she said.

“Sir, there’s no need for firearms,” Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him. Kinsey said when he asked police to shoot him.

“I’m not in the habit of supporting anyone who wages personal attacks on me or my family,” he said.

The language of disunity was the day before. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general. Cruz’s father had indirect links to John F. Kennedy’s as attorney general.

“Understood what the responsibilities are,” he said.

“Why do we have elections?”

“Agnostic about Donald Trump”

Is AGRARIAN? | Associated Press

The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the police officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The delegates responded with angry boos, and Cruz backed up his former Virginia Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who said Cruz should not support the convention floor as she was shot to death during a traffic stop. Cellphone videos captured shooting’s killing and aftermath of Charlotte’s shooting, prompting nationwide protests over the treatment of the black community.

“There’s a thin line between”

“Black therapist says police shot him with his hands raised”

Associated Press

A black therapist who was trying to calm an autistic patient in the middle of the street says he was shot by police even though he had his hands in the air and repeatedly told them that no one was armed.

The moments before and after the shooting were recorded on cell phone video and released to local media. The video shows Charles Kinsey lying on the ground with his arms raised, telling the officers who appeared to have him surrounded, “As long as I’ve got my hands up, they’re not going to shoot me. This is what I’m thinking. They’re not going to shoot me.”

The video released by WSVN, a Miami TV station, was released after his son, Janelle Monae, Kelly Rowland, Grammy-winner Diane Warren and Lea Michele and Zendaya. It was a musical joyride for the first lady and Corden, who was taped last month.

When was the last time you took your hands up? Corden asked.
By ADAM ROGERS

Former Herdzone.com columnist and Herd Insider editor Jack Bogaczyk officially retired on June 30th after more than 40 years as a beat reporter, editor and columnist. Now a few weeks into his retirement, Parthenon Sports Editor Adam Rogers sat down with the man behind the byline to allow Thundering Herd fans who came to love his stories a chance to learn more about him.

Adam Rogers: We started in Kentucky by graduating from high school there and then went to the University of Kentucky. Now you’re going back there again. What’s it like to see things come full circle with you going back to where you started?

Jack Bogaczyk: Well, what’s funny is Carol and I have been married 44 years on August 25, and we both grew up there, but never lived there. Because I had an uncle and an aunt, two separate families, that lived in the Binghamton area. So I’m not going back there again. What’s it like to see things come full circle with you going back to where you started?

Adam Rogers: You started in Kentucky by graduating from high school there and then went to the University of Kentucky. Now you’re going back there again. What’s it like to see things come full circle with you going back to where you started?

Jack Bogaczyk: Well, what’s funny is Carol and I have been married 44 years on August 25, and we both grew up there, but never lived there. Because I had an uncle and an aunt, two separate families, that lived in the Binghamton area. So we’re never there where we’re from, so we’re going back there. We’ve got a lot of friends there, get family there. So we’ll try it and see how it is.

Adam Rogers: It’s a little strange, but it seemed like, at the time, the right place to go instead of trying to cast around and find somewhere. Now maybe we’ll get there and we’ll say, ‘okay, maybe we will cast around.” The other thing is we’d like to, at least, spend a couple of months each winter in Florida, especially in March, because we both like spring training baseball. So we’re going to try to see a lot of spring training baseball. Probably somewhere on the Gulf coast like Sarasota, Bradenton, Fort Myers, something like that.

Adam Rogers: What was the process like for you in getting your first job in New York?

Jack Bogaczyk: It was setting for a paper in northern Kentucky, the Northern Community College, in summer because I could work 40 full time hours at a newspaper called the Kentucky Post, which was delivered with the Cincinnati Post on the Kentucky side of the river, and take my 15 hours a semester. So I could get the practical experience, and that really helped me think. Then, when I became a senior at UK, back in the day, I guess they still do this, different newspaper chains would send recruiters to talk to journalism students and Gannett, which owned the Binghampton paper, sent someone in and I interviewed with them. They called me, they said, if you want a job you can either go to Elmira, New York; Binghampton, New York; or Bellingham, Washington. Because I had an uncle and an aunt, two separate families, that lived in the Binghamton area. So I thought, well, Carol being an attractive woman and beautiful and stuff, and I’d like to be near her, so I went to Binghampton.

Adam Rogers: So you went to work, the NBA hired me to be the PR guy. Then, when I became a senior at UK and went to work, the NBA hired me to be the PR guy. Again, that’s what I heard. So I went to work for the NBA. It was like I didn’t really have to go look for a job, the job kind of found me and I’ll truth be told, I was fortunate. So I was there until Thanksgiving weekend of ‘74 and we moved to Roanoke, Virginia. I went to work there at the time for, it was still two papers back in the old days, an afternoon paper, The World News, and essentially they acquired the Roanoke Times and The World News, then they got rid of the name The World News. So I worked for the Roanoke newspapers for 26½ years. Left there and went to work for the NBA hired me to be the PR guy for the NBA team, the National Basketball League. The NBA was just starting then, the Roanoke Dazzle. I probably would have stayed there longer. I was only there 15 months because the NBA lost a lot of money the first year of the league. They estimated that each team lost $7 million. I don’t know if that was accurate or not, but they were changing all the PR jobs in the league to sales jobs, so I didn’t want to sell. So I was fortunate at the time the Charlotte Bobcats was looking for a columnist. Judy Jenkins, who had been their columnist, had died of cancer and I think in the summer of 2002, and they were looking for a columnist in October. I contacted them and they were already into their interview process, and they said your name had come up to somebody, but we thought you were retired. Well at the time I was only 52-years old, so I wasn’t retired. That’s how I ended up in Charleston and I’m there for 14 months when you asked me to be sports editor. So I did that in addition to being columnist. Then in 2012, actually in late 2011, I reached out to Mike Hamrick and said I got tired of trying to manage the sports department and write at the same time. I wanted to write and, as you know, a lot colleges are hiring ‘former newspaper sports writers’ for their websites and to drive more traffic on their websites. So I approached Mike Hamrick and said I would be interested in helping me do that for you. iPad has a guy, Virginia Tech has a guy. I just mentioned all those other schools, and a lot of conference have people. I just said I think it will add something to your program, and I think Mike pretty well. So we kept talking for several months and then I went to work for both Marshall and Mike worked a deal with Mike Kirtner, so then I worked both sides of the street as Editor of the Herald for Kindred Communications and I worked for Marshall University for the Athletic Department in sales, retailing and merchandise.

Adam Rogers: You talked about you approaching Mike about you coming on board. When Mike came back to you and said they wanted you to hire him, what was the first thing you wanted to get across to him and keep him interested in the program?

Jack Bogaczyk: Well, we wanted to get across what a great opportunity it was there at Marshall, where I had a deal with Mike Kirtner, so then I worked both sides of the street as Editor of the Herald for Kindred Communications and I worked for Marshall University for the Athletic Department in sales, retailing and merchandise.

Adam Rogers: You talked about you approaching Mike about you coming on board. When Mike came back to you and said they wanted you to hire him, what was the first thing you wanted to get across to him and keep him interested in the program?

Jack Bogaczyk: Well, we wanted to get across what a great opportunity it was there at Marshall, where I had a deal with Mike Kirtner, so then I worked both sides of the street as Editor of the Herald for Kindred Communications and I worked for Marshall University for the Athletic Department in sales, retailing and merchandise.

Adam Rogers: You talked about you approaching Mike about you coming on board. When Mike came back to you and said they wanted you to hire him, what was the first thing you wanted to get across to him and keep him interested in the program?

Jack Bogaczyk: Well, we wanted to get across what a great opportunity it was there at Marshall, where I had a deal with Mike Kirtner, so then I worked both sides of the street as Editor of the Herald for Kindred Communications and I worked for Marshall University for the Athletic Department in sales, retailing and merchandise.