Constitution to be read

By RICK BANKS
Staff reporter

The present proposed constitution now facing Student Senate will be read for the second time at 9:15 p.m. in their scheduled weekly meeting.

Sections, or the entire constitution may be approved. The constitution is also subject to debate.

Included in this proposed constitution are new election provisions which are presently delaying the Spring election. Filing dates for these elections have been cancelled indefinitely.

Class officers are the positions that are causing confusion at the present time. They would be transferred from Student Senate to Student Cabinet.

Another provision would allow juniors to run for Student Body president and vice president.

Some officer's terms expire in March. Voting is expected soon because of this factor.

The Rules Committee will meet today to discuss objections to the amendment.

Other minor Senate action will take place at the meeting today. However, action on this proposed constitution is expected to be the heaviest and most important.

MU attempts MAC reinstatement

Presidents meet as council today

By MICHAEL WALKER
Staff reporter

Marshall University will try for reinstatement to the Mid-American Conference today, as the Council of Presidents meets in Columbus, Ohio.

The council, composed of presidents from the colleges and universities which are members of the MAC, will consider an expected report by President Roland H. Nelson Jr. on the progress of improving the school's athletic facilities, one of the reasons Marshall was suspended from the conference last summer.

Marshall is also expected to report that the situations under which rule violations occurred have been corrected.

Members of the Athletic

Honors may expand

The Dean's Advisory Board is "trying to coordinate better the Honors Program and expand it," according to Dean Edward M. Collins, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Meeting Tuesday, the committee worked on plans to devise a program that would take the program already at Marshall and expand it to cover the entire time a student attends Marshall.

Dean Collins feels that the bright student should be given the attention needed to attract him to Marshall. This should also be applied in keeping him here.

One way to do this is to offer a good many more options and courses to the bright student.

Specifically this would mean that each department would have an Honors section in the courses it offered. This would allow a student to take Honors classes in all his courses.

Department, none of whom will accompany Dr. Nelson on his trip, said all they can do now is hope the MAC will consider the adjustments made by Marshall and render a decision.

The presidents will also discuss a possible expansion, eligibility of junior college transfers and participation of conference athletes in outside competition.

Seminar topics are announced

By MONTY FARLEY
Staff reporter

Policy making, racial problems, and Greeks will be discussed by Student Senate Leadership Seminar, Feb. 27-28 at Carter Caves, Kentucky, said Commissioner of Student Government Affairs, James Hollock, Butler, Pa., senior.

Hollock said he wanted to see more students involved in the policy making at MU. "Students should have a voice in faculty discussions and decisions and represent the needs of the students. Much progress has been made. For example, the two student athletic commissioners who each have one vote in hiring a coach or athletic director, or deciding if a game should be added to a schedule. This is what we need more of, active student voice in decision making policies."

"We also should have a board of students and faculty to investigate the teacher's self evaluation and course evaluation report. Those who don't come up to standard should be 'sand-blasted.' The point is to have the highest quality of education without looking only at the degree a teacher holds. This is where a student's point of view is helpful," said Hollock.

The racial situation will also be discussed. Hollock said that "blacks do not want to associate with the rest of the student body but want to isolate themselves. I can't blame them for feeling this way but we need understanding and working together if we want improvement."

The decline of the Greeks is another subject to be discussed. According to Hollock, many people feel that Greeks are "bigots" and "racists" and are on the decline. He also said that many students feel that being part of any organization results in "loss of identity." He, however, feels that the decline of Greeks is not evident and that being a member of an organization should "add to one's identity and broaden one's attitudes."

He feels that stereotypes and bad publicity cause much of the Greek resentment and fosters the "lack of individualism" idea.

Budget remains cloudy

Marshall's 1970-71 budget situation remained clouded Wednesday, and it may be a considerable time before the state allocation is known.

The Board of Regents holds the decision. The Board was allocated approximately $55.5 million by the Legislature as a "lump sum" with no individual breakdown of funds for Marshall, West Virginia University and the state colleges governed by the board.

A spokesman for the Regents said Wednesday figures on Marshall's share of the Regents appropriation were not available. Marshall officials also have said they don't know how much money Marshall will receive.

An expenditure schedule must be submitted by April 15 to the state finance commissioner. A Regents spokesman said it is un-

MU dilemma-- news managing

By TIM BUCEY
Of the editorial board

Students on this campus have a right to uncensored, straight and factual news stories, but due to some administrators twisting the news, they don't always get this.

The students and administration expect the university news paper, or any other paper for that matter, to tell it like it is.

The Parthenon also expects the administration to do this. "When a news source refuses to give all the facts or wants a story written his way only, the common term is 'managing the news.'" And directly or indirectly this is a breach of freedom of the press.

The story in question appeared in Tuesday's edition of The Parthenon concerning second semester enrollment. The Office of the Registrar released only those figures they wanted known publically by way of a prepared news release.

When the Parthenon tried to obtain other information not included in the press release, the registrar said this was the only information he could give the news media and would like the press release to be printed verbatim.

This brings up one question. Why? Why does he not want certain information, such as the actual head count of students on campus released? Is it because the university wants registration figures to look more impressive?

The information emphasized in the news release was the full-time equivalent students which is computed by dividing part-time hours at the undergraduate level by 12, and the graduate level by nine and adding it to full-time enrollment.

The result shows 7,086 full-time equivalent students on paper, not on campus. This figure does not represent the actual number of full-time students on campus.

There have been similar instances by other officials. Marshall doesn't need to turn to such tactics as this in order to obtain increased allocations from the legislature. Our need already has been made known and our case rests.

News management is as much a violation of students rights as demonstrators who violate student rights by not allowing them to attend class. In fact, they both have one thing in common - they don't allow students access to information to which they are entitled.

University officials should "tell it like it is" and include all the facts, not just the ones that make the University look good.

West has new time

The women of West Hall voted Monday night on five proposals for visitation hour policies, accepting a seven-and-one-half hour plan, according to Leah Ann Miller, New Haven senior and dorm president.

Hours adopted were Saturday 8:30-12 p.m. and Sunday 2-6 p.m.

Of the 207 women who voted, 160 agreed to have visiting hours while 47 were opposed to any hours at all. A total of 1,561 hours were voted on, the average number being seven.

The proposal to have some range of hours on Sunday received 130 votes; Friday, 61 votes; Saturday, 67; Monday, nine; Tuesday, eight; Wednesday, 11; and Thursday, nine. Because the majority wanted weekend hours, five proposals were set up, consisting of combinations of Sunday hours with either Friday or Saturday hours.

The dorm approved a closed door policy by a vote of 119 to eight.

All visitors must sign in and out at the desk and be escorted to and from the lounges by the hostess. The women also agreed to supervise the halls themselves, each system being set up by the individual wings.

Any violations of the IDC's rules or policies will be referred to Dean Buskirk, associate dean of students, and to the dorm's judicial board.

Dormitory living can be forced

By LARRY MOYER
Staff reporter

Students can legally be forced to live in University dormitories, according to Warren Myers, assistant dean of students for housing programs.

Myers said the university could uphold this ruling in courts because all students are not required to live in dormitories, just freshmen and sophomores.

All students contacted have responded to the request. If a student does not comply with this request, his registration can be cancelled. Myers said there is no one in this position now, but it can be done.

Some students have been exempted from this required living by presenting a suitable excuse such as health or financial reasons.

When asked if the required living was fair, Myers said it is not a matter of being fair or unfair, because the University is in a position to make improvements and upgrade the University.

Not only does the University need the revenue from the dormitories to pay off outstanding bonds, but the University needs it to create new programs within residential halls, Myers said.

MU is in the process of creating a tutoring program for all students, including dormitory residents. The University is trying to create a new atmosphere in residence halls, he said.

Steps are being taken to make dormitory living more private with more freedom. Recreational rooms have been installed and more lenient visitation hours have been established.

The University is also showing films in the residential halls and bringing in guest speakers to talk to the residents about student problems and other related topics.

Phi Tau national to install Marshall group as chapter

Phi Kappa Tau national fraternity plans to install the Marshall colony as a chapter in mid-April, according to Kelsey Hayward, New Cumberland senior and president of the local colony.

Hayward said the fraternity plans a short pledge period for second semester rush as all upperclassmen who pledge will be initiated earlier than usual. This will permit them to participate in charter signing ceremonies and become charter members of the chapter.

According to William D.

Jenkins, national secretary, Phi Kappa Tau fraternity is 18th in size among a total of 60 American college Greek letter societies. In adherence to a policy established years before, definite balance of chapters has been maintained with representatives in both large universities and small colleges in state institutions and endowed schools.

Hayward said the MU Phi Tau's will host a Domain Conference Feb. 27 with chapters from Miami of Ohio, Ohio, Ohio State, and Cincinnati Universities participating.

certain if the Board at that time has to spell out how much money each school will get, but the feeling seems to be that it will.

The Legislature approved the $1,088,000 for improvement of MU athletic facilities including upgrading of Fairfield Stadium, home of MU football.

One question mark hanging over the state budget Wednesday was whether Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. would approve the budget bill passed by the Legislature. The governor called a press conference Wednesday at which the budget could come up.

Do You Want . . .
MONEY FOR FUTURE FAMILY
RESPONSIBILITY?

If you're like most young men marriage will probably be your next big step. And marriage means increased responsibilities. It's a good idea to start building a cash reserve now to provide for those future family responsibilities. A life insurance program started now, when rates are lowest, offers a unique solution to this problem. I'd like to discuss such a program with you at your convenience.

Architecture not offered

Marshall does not offer a curriculum in architecture as well as other West Virginia Schools, according to Dr. A. E. McCaskey, dean of the College of Applied Science.

The reason he said was that few people were interested in an architectural course. This would make the program too expensive for Marshall to support.

Supporting an architectural school, Dean McCaskey said, would be like supporting a law school or a medical school with only 60 students enrolled. These few students enrolled would not be enough to supplement the cost of the school.

The lack of an architectural school causes many West Virginia architectural students to go to out of state schools such as the University of Cincinnati or VPI.
