Seven appointed to new advisory board

The West Virginia Board of Regents has appointed seven lay members to the new Institutional Board of Advisors for Marshall.

Named to the board were Paul M. Churton, Huntington, and senior vice president of marketing and administration for Ashland Coal, Inc.; Charles K. Connor, Jr., Beckley, president and publisher of the Beckley newspapers and a Marshall graduate; Russell C. Dunbar, Huntington, former chief judge of Cabell County Circuit Court and presently, a professor of law at West Virginia University. Dunbar also is a Marshall graduate.

David N. Harris, Huntington, personnel manager for Huntington Alloys, Inc., and a Marshall graduate; Dan R. Moore, Matewan, president and chairman of the board of Matewan National Bank; Sandra Wilkerson, St. Albans, former teacher and a Marshall graduate, and James S. Williams, Huntington, district labor official.

Four additional members will join the seven lay members in making up the new Board of Advisors. Under the new legislation, Marshall faculty, staff, and students each will have an elected representative, and Marshall President Robert B. Hayes will appoint an administrator to serve as the eleventh member.

Dr. Elinore Taylor, assistant professor of English, has been elected by the faculty as its representative, and Eugene F. Crawford, a campus police officer, has been selected to represent the university staff. The student representative is expected to be elected after the beginning of the Fall term. Hayes has not announced the administration representative.

The duties of the Board of Advisors will include a review of all proposals of the institution in the areas of mission, academic programs, budget, capital facilities, and institutional wide personnel policies, and serving as Marshall's search and screening committee for candidates to fill vacancies.

"They are a good group of people. This board has a great deal more responsibilities than the previous board," C.T. Mitchell, director of University Relations, said.

Smith Hall fire alarm false scare

By Leskie Pinson

The fire alarm that sent occupants of Smith Hall heading for the exits just before 11 a.m. Tuesday was the result of the alarm on the fifth floor by the elevator being pulled, according to Safety Officer Leonard E. Bedel.

"We checked the building out and found it was only a false alarm," Bedel said.

A few students remarked it was the first time they had been in a fire drill since high school.

One person who was relieved at the brevity of the situation was Dave Minor, Huntington sophomore. He was the disc jockey on-the-air at WMUL at the time. He said all he could do "was put on a long playing record and get out."

Among the students and faculty that were chased out of the building by the series of short, loud blasts, few seemed alarmed. Many just talked with each other and seemed to welcome the break in their classes, which were about one hour old.

One student said that he was glad that "a rainy day wasn't picked for this event" while a female student said the alarms awoke her from a sleepy-eyed lecture session. Another lamented leaving her books, "Just in case this is real."

THURSDAY

OUTSIDE

The high today will be in the mid-80s with the low near 70. There is a 60 percent chance of rain today, 40 percent tonight. The forecast for the weekend is partly cloudy, warm and humid with the highs in the mid-80s, according to the National Weather Service at Tri-State Airport.

Catalog cover controversial

By Elizabeth Bevins

It has been years since the Marshall catalog has been talked about as much as this year's has, Director of University Relations C.T. Mitchell said.

The cover displays a blond woman dressed in shorts with a book on her lap. The complaints are basically that the cover is sexist and unfitting for a college catalog.

Also, the woman, Jane Ward, is a third-year nursing student at West Virginia University. She was on Marshall's campus last summer taking a chemistry class when the picture was taken.

Mitchell, who is co-responsible for the cover with John C. McKinney, manager of communications, said he has already received several responses to the cover. He said he has received both favorable and unfavorable, but so far most have been unfavorable.

Mitchell said he has received four letters and several phone calls. Three of the letters were from the Department of Psychology, he said.

"I hope people don't overreact to this," Mitchell said. "There was no sexist intention."

"I thought it was a very attractive photo in a number of ways, none of them demeaning, McKinney said. "The selection was based purely on the four best shots we had."

"We try to be different in a lot of things we do. It's an actual scene taken on campus."

One person who is opposed to the cover is Dr. Donald D. Chezick, chairman of the psychology department, who said it is "clearly a sexist cover."

"It seems to me it doesn't present the image of the university as an institution of higher learning," he said. "It doesn't seem appropriate to use a standard Madison Avenue appeal to use a woman as a sexual object."

The cover of the 1981-82 Marshall catalog has stirred a controversy. The woman pictured on the cover is a third-year nursing student at West Virginia University. Comments regarding the picture have ranged from "sexist" to "delightful."

"Notice there is not a cute male on the cover," he said.

"I'm concerned that when we send this out to prospective students, some might be offended as far as to not come to Marshall."

"It is totally out of line as to what a university should represent," he said.

On the other hand, Dr. Sam Clagg, chairman of the geography department, said he saw nothing wrong with the cover.

"It's a legitimate, delightful cover as far as this old dinosaur's concerned," he said. "I'm sick to death of hearing about 'sexist' anyway."

Tranquil living the norm in dorms, residency up 12 percent

By Leskie Pinson

Summer dorm dwelling is a different world, according to some Twin Towers West residents.

"It's a lot more quiet than a regular fall or spring semester," Brian Jackson, Washington, D.C. senior, said. "I guess I'm a dorm veteran, this being my second summer and fourth overall year, and I'd have to say that this is the quietest time I've ever seen."

"It gets to be boring without many people around," John Starling, Point Pleasant senior, said. "And even though there are less people to serve, the food in the cafeteria doesn't seem to be any better."

The number of students staying in the dorms is diminutive compared to a regular semester but the total is up from last year, according to Ray Welty, director of housing.

"We had 313 students in residence in TTW as of June 19, just after the first term began," Welty said. "This is up 12 from the same time last year. But we will also house other groups. We currently have 57 from the Upward Bound program."

"This total compares with an average of 2,000 students during a regular semester. Generally in the spring and fall we have 2,100 at first and lose about 300 of these during the course of the term," Welty said.

In some past years there has been no phone service during the summer but a student demand for the phones has caused this service to be extended for five floors at an extra cost to the individual. "We filled those floors and had applicants for about half a floor more," Welty said. "Many students who didn't ask for phones are saying now that they wish they had."

Each floor has a phone for general use but not having a phone in your room can be a "bummer" according to Jackson.

One of the apparent advantages of the quieter surroundings is that it is easier to study.

"I find that I make myself study more in the summer," Keith Korintus, Bridgeville, Pa. graduate student said. "There's just not that much else to do."

"Without people running around at all hours it is easier to study," Jeff Joyce, Welch sophomore, said. "And there's more privacy to do your studying in."

But not everyone feels this way. Anna Gillman, Logan senior, says that having boys and girls in the same building leads to a "louder, more hectic" environment.

The men are housed up to the 7th floor with women above.

College of Education to offer programs from grants awarded

By Kushleen Conaty

Almost $300,000 in federal, state and private grants have been received by Marshall University's College of Education, Assistant Dean Jack Maynard said.

The grants were awarded through the West Virginia Department of Education and its bureaus of Learning Systems and Vocational, Technical and Adult Education.

"The funding allows a lot more flexibility," Maynard said.

The college programs provided will include nutrition education, physical education for the handicapped, reading achievement and vocational needs assessments and placings.

These programs involve the departments of Home Economics, Physical Education, Special Education, Counseling and Rehabilitation, Adult and Safety Education and the college's Bureau of Educational Services.

Another program involves the college's Bureau of Educational Field Services providing outreach services other than for academic work. Currently, Mingo County is receiving aid in developing strategies for improving student reading levels.

Maynard said the College of Education provides services throughout the state.

Campus summer dirt--easier to clean for some

By Leskie Pinson

The campus community during the summer is generally considered to be quite different than during a regular fall or spring semester. But one important element of Marshall University continues on with little regard to seasonal change--the work of the janitors.

"There aren't as many people to clean up after during the summer but the work remains the same," Mary Airgan, Smith Hall janitor, said. "I try to keep on top of it all the time so I don't fall behind."

Airgan is in charge of the radio and TV segment of the building. She points out that these operate almost year-round. "I always come in to do the job that I'm paid for. We all feel that way."

One thing that some classroom janitors say they like is the absence of night classes in the summer. "Without night classes I can get some of my work done sooner than in the regular semester," Robert Nowlin, Harris Hall janitor, said. "This last spring there were nine night classes and I'd have to wait until after 9 o'clock to do those rooms."

Nowlin pointed out that even though there are less students, the same number of rooms have to be cleaned. "That doesn't change, he said."

However, one thing that does change is the height of the thermometer. "It gets really hot," James Faulkner said. Faulkner, who does classrooms in the Science Building, said he just tries to get used to it and not complain.

For Twin Towers West janitor Clarence W. Martin the big work comes between semesters, when the dorms must be readied for in-coming students. "After this semester we will get on it to prepare for the fall students," Martin said. "And after last spring we got the rooms ready for summer."

"We don't have as much trash in the summer so we are able to take care of more of the little things. As you can see the (Twin Towers West) lounge is in very nice shape," Martin said. "The groups that come in are the only sources of trouble, but they're only here a while."

Martin goes on to his duties. "When I come to work I come to get the job done, no matter what time of year it is."

Fountain's dehydration to continue to September

By Leskie Pinson

The Memorial Fountain will run dry for the remainder of the summer, according to Harry E. Long, director of plant and administration operations.

The fountain is on the plaza of the Student Center and provides a gathering area for students who are between classes.

"The fountain was recently painted just before graduation and was turned on for the graduation weekend," Long said. "The decision was made to turn it off for the summer months to conserve energy."

Long pointed out that the fountain requires not only water but also electric to run the pumps that spurt the water into the air.

"The fountain will be turned on again in September when the fall semester begins," Long said. "We have ordered three new pumps to replace the current ones, which are becoming rather worn."

MU prof public info director

By Patrick Foose

Marshall political science professor Troy A. Stewart Jr., has been named acting public information director by the West Virginia Legislature's Joint Committee on Government and Finance.

Stewart said the position is now vacant and he is "filling in" until the committee can find a replacement for V. David Baker, who resigned this spring.

The Office of Public Information is the public relations arm of the Legislature. The office operates a toll-free hotline to provide information about the Legislature to the public.

Stewart worked with the Legislature during the 1981 session as director of the Judith A. Herdon Legislative Fellows program.

Stewart said the office is revising a media show that is distributed to West Virginia schools, in addition to the office's normal function of answering the public's questions about the state's legislative body.

"Working here you really get a feel for what the general populous thinks about government," Stewart said.

"We get people calling in here wanting to know everything from what bills passed to the name of Snuffy Smythe's wife," he said.

"I was ashamed to admit I knew the answer to that question."

Hot dog! Singer operates cafe on wheels

By Kushleen Conaty

Rosa's portable "cafe"; a hot spot on campus.

Rosa may be more commonly known to many Marshall students as the lead singer in the band, The Rage, rather than as "the hot dog lady".

Rosa Thomas, Rehobeth Beach, Del. junior, is the manager of a concession stand located behind the student union on weekday afternoons.

The equipment she uses and the food she sells is supplied by Marshall's custom food service department. She offers a wide variety of foodstuffs ranging from coffee, doughnuts, and pastries in the morning to hot dogs, chips, and fruit drinks in the afternoon.

"Lemonade is the most popular thing I sell, but of course it's the lemonade season," Rosa said. If her business continues to pick up, she said, she will probably offer ice cream and yogurt.

One of the most expensive items on her cart, a hot dog, is fifty cents. She sometimes runs specials such as a hot dog for a quarter with the purchase of a large drink when she has left-overs and is about to close for the day.

Rosa can be seen in Prichard Hall wheeling her cart on different floors from 8:30 to 9:00 a.m. She then moves to the basement of Old Main from 9:00 to 10:30 a.m. where she gives the vending machines a little competition, she said. Around 11:00 a.m. she sets up in the back of the student union facing the fountain and stays till 2:00 p.m.

"I enjoy meeting and talking to people," Rosa said. She hopes that now more students are aware of her service, they will take advantage of it inbetween classes.

Center quiet over summer

By Leskie Pinson

The Christian Center has a large amount of peace and quiet to share with anyone on campus this summer who is interested, according to office manager Lolita Greenawalt.

"Things are pretty quiet around here during the summer, but we don't mind," Greenawalt said. "We have many students come in and study in our different rooms and they all say that this is the best place they have to get their work done."

"We have one woman who is working on her dissertation and she says she just can't get it done at home."

Greenawalt explained that most of the ministers are traveling during the summer. "Some are at seminars or missionary training while others are lecturing to various church groups. We had one return recently from Florida and another go to St. Louis."

The center itself will undergo improvements this summer. "During the summer months we are able to do things like work on some of the decorative hangings and paint some on the inside. Also we are receiving carpeting before this fall."

One of the things exclusive to summer for the center is the orientation groups that come in. "We are on the orientation tour and we will have about 1,200 students come in," Greenawalt said. "We give them a quick tour of the building then sit down with their parents and explain to them what we offer during the regular semester."

"Most parents are glad to know that we are here to help their children with adaption to college life but we also let them know that we aren't here to be a monitor," Greenawalt said.

Legislature raises tuition ceiling

By Sherry Mitchell

The West Virginia Legislature raised the tuition ceiling for Marshall University. This does not mean that Marshall students will have to start paying $500 tuitions, according to Michael F. Thomas, Vice President for Financial Affairs. "Every fee increase or decrease must be approved by the Board of Regents. The ceiling increase gives the Board of Regents authority to increase tuition," said Thomas.

Ed Grose, Vice Chancellor for Finance and Facilities, said that the $200 ceiling had been established in 1957, and gradually needed to be increased because of rising costs.

"Each institution requests different increases and all fee increases must be approved by the Board of Regents on an annual basis in spring," said Grose.

Marshall's tuition increased by 26% in-state, and out-of-state increased by 11.8%, said Grose.

Full-time undergraduate tuition is $247.55 compared with last semesters $196.35. Non-resident tuition is $772.65 compared to last year's figure of $691.35.

Tuition at West Virginia University increased by 27% for in-state and 13% for out-of-state. The overall tuition increases for the other state colleges was 23% in-state and 10.5% for out-of-state. "The out-of-state tuition was not increased as much because they are so high already," said Grose.

Many students unaware of tuition wavers

More than 350 students will receive tuition wavers for the 1981-82 academic year, according to Jack L. Toney, assistant director of Financial Aid.

"A student must have a 3.5 grade point average and apply before the March 1 deadline," Toney said. "In my years here we have been able to fill nearly all of the qualified applications."

"The problem is that many people are unaware that they can apply and therefore don't get the full benefits available to them," Toney said.

"Besides GPA the other requirement is that the student be a West Virginia resident or live in one of the adjacent Kentucky or Ohio counties."

The wavier will be for both semesters of the 81-82 year, providing the student doesn't lose his 3.5 average. "It pays for tuition only, with the student paying his own fees," Toney said. "But the tuition is the larger of the two."

The wavers are authorized by the Board of Regents, which directs that at least 55 percent of the recipients be state residents.

SHONEY'S

FOR THE RECORD

Memos stifling information flow

Huntington City Council recently approved a mayoral directive preventing City Manager Dick Barton from issuing statements to the media. In a memo sent to City Manager Dick Barton from Mayor Bill Toney, the city manager was instructed to clear his statements with the mayor before issuing them to the media. Barton reacted to the directive by issuing a directive to all city department heads preventing them from releasing any information to the media unless cleared by him.

The workings of the city administration are important, especially since they involve the health, safety, and well-being of the community. These directives are depriving the citizens of Huntington of their right of access to information about the operations of city management. At the same time, they also are preventing the media from performing their function of disseminating needed information to the citizenry.

A truthful, comprehensive, and intelligent account of the actions of the city administration in a context which give them meaning is needed. However, the preventing of the access of and the dissemination of information to the public may cause harm which may not be corrected.

In our form of democracy, society demands of its members an active and intelligent participation in their society. It is assumed that people are adequately informed about the issues of the day, and that they are able to form judgments regarding these issues. It also is a function of the media to provide people with the information needed to perform their roles. Yet, the course taken by Toney and Barton is preventing this.

This situation needs to be remedied. Both city officials should rescind their directives immediately. If not, it will be the citizens of Huntington who will pay the price.

LETTERS

Catalog controversy

To the editor:

I would like to voice my complaint concerning the choice of photograph for the front cover of the 1981-82 student catalog. As a woman I find this cover irrelevant, if not degrading to Marshall's student population. What a "cutesy" picture of a scantily-clad female (who I hear is a student at W.V.U.) has to do with the promotion of Marshall as a respected learning institution, I will never know. Perhaps the university will attract a larger percentage of voyeuristic boys through this kind of "advertisement," but it certainly won't win points in drawing intelligent students who are here to learn.

Furthermore, this cover shot will do nothing to promote educational equity for women, but further propagates the myth that women come to college to get men. (Ironically, the textbook which this woman is holding on her lap is titled "Chemistry, Man and Society," another subtle reminder that women don't count in higher education).

Please, stop approving the use of "cheese cake" on Marshall's public relations and student publications. Respect the female students who are here to prepare for careers in their "Man's World." I hope that this letter finds its way to the culprit.

Jeanette Rowsey
Psychology senior

To the Editor:

Colleges and college catalogs.

I have heard more discussion on this subject since the new 1981-82 catalog arrived then I've heard in all my years of college education. If you've seen the new undergraduate and graduate catalogs you know why.

The new covers feature a well-proportioned young woman wearing a closely fitting blouse, sneakers and...well, there's a lot of leg showing.

So far no department has fessed up to responsibility for the cover. But in fairness, the cover is a terrific graphic improvement over the 1980-81 catalog. The color is sharper. So too the focus.

It seems the real discussion is over symbolism. The 1980-81 book depicts a few students talking on a sunny day while leaning against a tree. The supposed message: Marshall is a laid-back place. But what is the message of this new catalog? Is it, "Hey guys, the chicks are great. Come to school here."

I think not. I hope not. Because if such is the case, the critics are right.

Jarrell presented pediatric scholarship

Lynn E. Jarrell, Huntington graduate, has received a Huntington Pediatric Clinic Council Scholarship for the 1981 fall semester.

Jarrell, who received her Associate in Science in Nursing degree from Marshall May 9, was awarded the scholarship on the basis of her outstanding academic and clinical achievements. The scholarship is worth $250.

She will enroll in Marshall's Bachelor of Science in Nursing program this fall. She is a part-time employee in a Huntington pediatrician's office.

Miller appointed financial aid director

Edgar W. Miller has been named Marshall financial aid director.

Miller, whose appointment took effect July 1, fills a vacancy created by the resignation last spring of Donald Montrella, who became assistant dean of students at Dyke College in Cleveland, Ohio.

His responsibilities will be for administering all the university's scholarship and financial aid programs.

Miller is a Huntington native and former student affairs division staff member at Marshall.

Meadows 'Outstanding Student Teacher of Year'

Pamela Meadows

Pamela Meadows of Wheelersburg, Ohio, was named "Outstanding Student Teacher of the Year" by Marshall University's Psi Chapter, Delta Kappa Gamma education honorary, according to Josephine Fidler, chapter president.

Ms. Meadows, who was a student teacher at Cabell County's new Spring Hill Elementary School, received a B.A. degree in elementary education from Marshall's college of Education on May 9. She was recommended for the award by her supervising teachers, Linda Shelton, Cabell County teacher, and Margaret Vass, MU assistant professor of education.

As the 1981 "Outstanding Student Teacher," Ms. Meadows received $100 and her name engraved on a plaque containing the names of previous winners, which hangs in the College of Education Office.

Med school receives $5,136 from research fund

Mrs. Gary Gilbert, president of the West Virginia State Medical Association Auxiliary, recently presented the Marshall University School of Medicine a check for $5,136.20 as the school's appropriation from the American Medical Association's Education and Research Fund (AMA-ERF).

Money from this fund comes from physician contributions and auxiliary fund raising activities. The funds, according to MU School of Medicine Dean Robert W. Coon who accepted the check, will be used to support medical student research projects.

Two med school professors receive grants

Research grants have been awarded to two Marshall University School of Medicine faculty members, according to Dean Robert W. Coon.

Dr. Peter J. Kasvinsky, assistant professor of biochemistry, and Dr. Peter J. Knott, assistant professor of pharmacology, received three-year grants of $146,696 and $141,512 respectively, from the National Institutes of Health.

"Our total research base now stands at between $3.5 million and $4 million," Dr. Coon said. "This is an excellent support level for our young medical education program. I am very pleased with the success our faculty is having in winning recognition for the school through research funding in competition with other schools nationwide," he said.

Kasvinsky's award was for "Enzymes Regulating Glycogen Metabolism." The research will focus on phosphorylase, the enzyme responsible for the breakdown of glycogen.

Knott's study was on "Brain Serotonin-Dopamine Interaction and Behavior," which involves two neurotransmitters that send messages from one nerve cell to another, according to Coon.

Upward Bound motivating students

By Michael F. Bailey

Although many people desire to be "upward bound," few get the support and encouragement offered to area high school students participating this summer at Marshall in a program by that name.

Upward Bound is a federally-funded program. Its objective is to "work with high school students so they can motivate themselves to complete post-secondary education," according to Director Sandra B. Cavender.

Offered to students with demonstrated academic potential but who come from families with limited incomes (as defined by the U.S. Office of Education), participants are exposed to a wide range of academic and cultural experiences.

Upward Bound is comprised of two parts—the academic year and the summer session. Regular club meetings, projects during the school year and monthly activities on the Marshall campus highlight the academic year portion of the program.

Fifty-eight high school students from Cabell, Wayne and Mingo counties are taking part in the six-week summer session at Marshall. The men are staying in Twin Towers West and the women are staying in Twin Towers East.

During their stay, Upward Bound students take such classes as science, math and oral/written communication. They also enroll in such non-traditional courses as yoga, self-defense, drama and water skiing, Cavender said.

In addition to attending classes, members listen to guest speakers, have parties and dances, and take field trips ranging from a visit to a local bank to a weekend excursion to Washington D.C. "We are trying to make learning a different experience," Cavender said.

"Career education has become a definite emphasis," Cavendar said, with students urged to discuss and research possible job paths. Many students work part-time jobs sponsored by the Comprehensive Employment Training Act.

All expenses associated with the summer program are paid by Upward Bound. In addition, students receive a $30-a-month "incentive stipend" during the summer as compared to $15 monthly during the academic year.

Through these various "learning and enrichment experiences" the students hopefully begin viewing education after high school as a more realistic goal, Cavender said. Upward Bound staff assist their students in preparing the various entrance forms required by post-secondary institutions, be they colleges, vocational schools or other training centers.

Responses of Upward Bound students concerning the program were positive.

"It's a new experience," said Kim Redd, 15, of Huntington High School. "I get to meet people from different schools and the classes help me with my high school courses."

"I think it's helped me communicate with other people," said Tim Ruley, 15, of Huntington East High School.

"You learn how to deal with other people," said Tara Branham, 17, of Fort Gay High School. "But we're so busy. We really need more free time."

All of the students interviewed said they plan to continue their education after high school. Last year, 10 of 16 graduating high school seniors enrolled in the program opted for post-secondary education, Cavender said.

Upward Bound started nationally in 1966, and began at Marshall in 1973. The current Marshall grant runs through fiscal year 1983. And after that, "It all depends on the mood of Congress," Cavender said.

Children's Theatre challenges students

By Kevin Thompson

Hansel and Gretel, Huckleberry Finn, Snow White, and Repunzel are familiar to us from our childhood memories.

To Robert Drake, a sophomore theatre major, these fairy tale characters occupy much of his time. No, Robert is not suffering from any type of mental disease as some people may guess. He is taking a children's theatre class this summer from Dr. N.B. East, associate professor of speech.

"In the class we learn about the child audience and how to direct a play for the child. We learn how to draw floor plans, how to construct set pieces, how to do color renderings, how to do costume sketches and put together a production book," said Drake.

One of the activities that the class members participate in is to direct a skit from a children's play. Not all of the actors in the skits are in the class. Some of them have never even had any previous acting experience.

Both Shawn Richardson and Dirk Carter, the actors in Drake's production, a Huckleberry Finn skit, have never had any acting experience. "During the summer, we have to scrounge for actors. I got lucky," said Drake.

Richardson is a history major. Carter is a voice major and is not enrolled in Marshall this summer.

When asked what he thought of Drake as a director, Richardson responded, "He's picky. He's a perfectionist. He gave me two night's to learn my lines."

Drake served as assistant director for "Bus Stop" and is currently working in the same capacity for the Marshall production of "Romantic Comedy."

He recognizes a difference between producing plays for adults and producing plays for children. "Children are much more restless. They need more action," said Drake.

Many of the students that have had children's theatre believe that it is a hard class.

Joel Wlodarczyk, Erie, Pa. theatre major, had to drop the class because it took a great amount of his time.

"I think it's a terrific class. I've learned more in this five weeks than I could have learned in an entire year. It's very hard because like only one person in the whole class will make an 'A.' You have to do excellent work. It's not an easy 'A,'" said Helen Hage, a student in the class.

"We have covered every art form with the exception of music in this class," according to Ed Napier, a theatre major.

"If you want to pull an 'A' you must have some theatre background," according to Wlodarczyk.

Bob Sargent, a student in the class who is directing a segment of "Treasure Island," agrees with the other students that the class is very difficult. "It takes a lot of patience to direct amateur actors," he added.

The students, while saying that Dr. East was a very demanding professor, had nothing but praise for him.

"Dr. East is a fine educator," said Ed Napier.

"It's a great class. You've just got to be prepared to work," Bob Sargent said.

White, D'Antoni camps successful

By Andrea L. Billups

"Regardless of your size, you can still handle a basketball," said former Herd point guard, Greg White.

White and Mike D'Antoni, both standout point guards at Marshall, used that philosophy as they instructed 150 young and aspiring roundballers in summer basketball camps held at the Cabell County Memorial Field House, June 29-July 10.

White said he had worked with D'Antoni last summer in basketball camps, and this summer they decided to work together and sponsor the Greg White-Mike D'Antoni Basketball Camp. For a $50 fee, youngsters, ages seven through 18 received instruction in passing, rebounding, flexibility and various other phases of the game. The camp was run on a daytime basis only, with classes being taught from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

White said the camps were very successful. "The camps went real well. There were no injuries and we had more kids than we expected." White said that although the camps were advertised in the newspaper, he and D'Antoni didn't work hard on advertising it. Surprisingly enough, White said some children traveled long distances each day to participate.

White and D'Antoni both gained popularity at Marshall as point guards who specialized in handling the basketball. D'Antoni now plays professional basketball in Italy and recently went back this summer to conduct a camp similar to ones he has in West Virginia.

White has conducted 30 camps in Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, and many cities in West Virginia. He said he enjoys traveling and working with children, but he is especially happy that he is under no pressure to play basketball himself.

"It feels great just to be normal," he said. "There was a lot of pressure playing in Huntington. I enjoyed it for four years, but now I think it's someone else's turn to handle that pressure."

White said he is undecided as to what he plans to do in the future. "I'm ready to move on," he said. "I prefer to play basketball in Italy. If I don't play basketball again, I'll come back and finish my degree in Marketing."

For now, White chooses to pass on his knowledge of basketball to the young. The little boy that watches with amazement as White works magic with the ball, may well be the Greg White of tomorrow.

Four sign track letters-of-intent

Marshall track and cross country coach Rod O'Donnell recently announced the signing of four additional prep athletes to letters-of-intent. The four increase O'Donnell's recruit total to six. The coach previously signed Canadian distance runners John Warnock and Roy Poloni.

O'Donnell said the quartet of freshman harriers could possibly be joined by another member later this month. However, he said he is pleased with the quality of the six already inked.

"I am very satisfied with three results of the recruiting," O'Donnell said. "I feel everyone recruited will be able to score in next year's Southern Conference meet. My lone disappointment was in the quantity of athletes, but limitations limited that aspect."

Coal Grove High School standout Rob Alford will team with MU weightmen, Shawn McWhorter in the discus. Alford, whose best prep heave is 172-0, finished second in the Ohio AA meet this year in the discus.

Columbus South High School middle distance man, Keith Brown, should help the Herd in an event that it was thin in last year. O'Donnell said he also may try Brown in the long distance events. Brown posts a personal best time of 4:17.8 in the 1600 meters.

Brad Hanson, a hurdler and sprinter from Silver Spring, Md., is what O'Donnell calls, "one of the best I've ever recruited." Hanson, who captured Maryland's AA 330 Intermediate Hurdles championship, lists times of 54.8 in the 400 hurdles, 38.4 in the 330 hurdles, 14.6 in the 110 hurdles and 49.2 in the 400 meters.

Minford Ohio's Mark Shonkwiler is the second pole vaulter O'Donnell has snared from Minford in the past three years, the other being junior Bill Powers who is the current Southern Conference indoor champ and outdoor runner-up. Shonkwiler, who finished third in the Ohio AA meet in the pole vault, has a top vault of 14-3.

according to Ed Miller, financial aid director.

The fund has assisted outstanding Marshall students since 1973. "There are a number of young professionals all over West Virginia today who were encouraged to continue their education by receiving a Prichard Scholarship," Miller said.

The fund derives its name from the orphanage and school established by Fred C. Prichard in 1927 at Ona. It remained in operation until 1966, sometimes having as many as 140 children attending classes.

myths will be discussed, as well as various diet books and fad diets.

Kentucky all-stater signs for soccer

Phil Meyer, a 5-10, 150 pound former all-state fullback in Kentucky, has become the sixth recruit to sign a letter-of-intent at Marshall, Herd soccer coach Sam Hood announced recently.

Meyer, a graduate of Louisville's Ballard High, earned all-state honors in 1980 and this past season was named to Kentucky's second team. Ballard High School was this season's Kentucky state soccer champion.

Meyer was also a member of the Louisville Spurs, an amateur team that captured the Soccer for American Youths (SAY) national championship in 1979 and 1980.

"Phil could easily step right in and start for us," Hood said. "He is a strong player who gives us another man in a position where we are thin."

Only one returning letterman at full back is expected to return for Marshall-sophomore Jim Karnes. Meyer is the Herd's initial 1981 fullback signee.

Catalog

"I have summer class now and women dress like that every day. It's a very appropriate cover for a modern-day catalog.

"Every time there is something different around here, people want to go to war over it," he said.

Furthermore, he said, "If I had nothing to do but worry about that, I think I would have very little to do."
