Henderson construction 'a mess,' chancellor says

By Patricia Proctor

West Virginia Board of Regents vice chancellor and spokesman Dr. Edward Grose said Wednesday afternoon that "it's still not out of the question that the Henderson Center could be finished in time for basketball."

However, he was quoted in a story in the Wednesday morning Huntington-Herald-Dispatch as saying, "We told the people at Marshall that at this stage it's very difficult to make a prediction (on the opening date) and that they should be able to handle the first games at least" at Memorial Field House.

Wednesday afternoon, Grose said, "It's a mess. Hughes-Bechtol Inc. (the mechanical contracting firm who stopped work over a pay dispute with the BOR) decided late Monday afternoon that they would not accept any reconciliation to come back on the job and finish the work. Basically, they refused to settle in the Court of Claims and said they would stay off the job."

Grose said Hughes-Bechtol filed an injunction in federal court to prevent the BOR from hiring another contractor to finish the work. The hearing will be Tuesday afternoon in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Western Division at Dayton.

"If the federal judge rules in Hughes-Bechtol's favor, our hands will be tied," Grose said. "If their injunction is not upheld, we can hire someone else to complete the work, and we will as soon as possible."

Grose said the only process the BOR is willing to settle the dispute by is Hughes-Bechtol filing through the court of claims. "The state constitution prohibits any other type of settlement," he said.

He said at this point the problem is out of the BOR's control and out of Marshall's control.

John Henry, legal counsel for Hughes-Bechtol, said he cannot project when the federal judge will rule on the injunction, but said he has every reason to believe the judge will rule as promptly as possible.

Henry said if Hughes-Bechtol could return to work now it is still possible that the firm could finish by the scheduled completion date.

"When we stopped work, we could have easily finished by the date Marshall and the BOR had set up," Henry said. "We would still like to finish in time, but time is running out. If the state of West Virginia won't solve by recognizing arbitration, we can't finish. We would like to finish the job, if the BOR would honor its contract."

Paul Bridges, spokesman for Mellon-Stuart, Inc., general contractor for the facility, said, "Last week we said if Hughes-Bechtol went back to work this week it might not delay the opening of the center, but that projection will probably have to change."

Bridges said if the state can replace Hughes-Bechtol quickly, it is still possible the facility could open in time. "We might have to restructure the work schedule, and it could be a hindrance, but it certainly could be remedied," he said. "Marshall could play basketball in the center by November, but it is up to the state to honor the contract and work that problem out."

Glenn Verbage, manager of Memorial Field House, said Marshall could book its basketball dates in the facility at a very late date and the building will still be available.

"Basically, we would never schedule anything major in this building against Marshall basketball, because it would be suicidal for us," Verbage said.

"The only problem could be the practice schedule for the field house," he said. "In the past, we have made up a practice schedule, but there might be things booked now. Anyway, there should be no conflict with games if they want to play here."

Karl J. Egnatoff, vice president of administration, said, "I don't think it's a good idea to make any plans to play in the field house."

He said, "We need to think in a more positive vein. Planning to play in the field house is counter-productive, and what we need to do is think positively and see what we need to do to get at least the arena finished for the basketball game."

Secretaries scared; deny overreaction

By Leskie Pinson

"There's an undercurrent of 'I'm scared.'"

This statement of a Marshall secretary seems to represent the feeling of many females who say they are not overreacting to three violent campus incidents.

The incidents, a pair of June attacks in Twin Towers East and a July 29 attack in the Community College, are being investigated "very hard" by university security, according to David Scites, assistant director of public safety.

"We are doing everything we can to end this situation," Scites said. "We've devoted many hours to investigation and have the cooperation of the Huntington Police Department."

Some secretaries indicated they have taken precautions since the incidents. "I always try to give the impression that I'm not alone and I have a pair of scissors close at hand," one secretary said. Another said she and her co-workers arrange so that no one will be left by herself. "Some people say we are over-reacting, but we don't think so."

Another secretary said she makes a policy of locking her door even when she leaves for a brief time. "A girl upstairs had her purse stolen from under her desk when she went to the restroom," she said. "This can happen at any time."

"There is a general feeling of not being safe on campus," one secretary said. Another claimed she had never seen a security officer check her building.

However, Scites said security checks campus buildings 24 hours a day. "We're doing all we can with the resources we have."

Scites said anyone seeing a suspicious person should report it to security immediately. "The other day a girl came in saying she had seen someone suspicious but that she had seen him an hour-and-a-half earlier," Scites said. "He could be long gone by then."

Students to be charged for pharmaceuticals

By Elizabeth Bevins

Students will have to pay for all pharmaceutical needs now in accord with the new student health contract with Family Care and Outpatient Center and Cabell Huntington Hospital, according to Kenneth Blue, assistant dean of student affairs.

Other services will be basically the same, Blue said.

This year, student health will pay for part or full-time students' first visit to a specialist if they have been referred by FCOC, he said. Student health will not pay for treatment beyond the cost of the visit itself.

Also, FCOC will be staffed with a nurse practitioner. The practitioner will "provide the same kind of care a physician would administer, but cannot prescribe medicine," Bluesaid. The instigation of a practitioner was to prevent an increase in student health fees.

"This was one thing that could be done without too much effect to services provided to students."

The student area of FCOC will be staffed with the practitioner, a nurse and a receptionist, Blue said. If a doctor is needed, the student will be referred to family practice on the same floor.

Services that will remain the same include X-ray and laboratory procedures, family planning, psychological service (up to the first specialty visit) and hospital emergency service. Student health pays up to $40 for ambulance and emergency room services.

A brochure explaining student health service and its changes will be distributed, "hopefully before school starts," in residence halls and Parthenon boxes, Blue said.

FOR THE RECORD

Attendance policies should be abolished

All attendance policies, whether they be departmental or of the individual teacher, should be abolished.

It has long been held that a teacher has the right to state an attendance policy at the beginning of the semester and enforce it during the semester. These are usually stated to lower the student's grade for "excessive absences," or even discredit the student a certain number of points for a corresponding number of absences.

When a brave student asks if points will be given for faithful attendance the teacher usually shrugs this off with a reply that the student is "expected" to come to class.

While most accept the above thinking, it is unquestionably erroneous.

In the public secondary schools system, a strong argument can be made for attendance affecting the student's grade. The system is set up with taxpayer's dollars to educate the youth of society. A policy to assure attendance can be justified.

However, students are in college by their own choice. They choose which classes they are to attend and pay for the privilege to attend those classes.

It can be said the student has a "franchise" in his chosen class. He paid for it, he owns it.

This does not mean the student should get extra credit for coming to class, only that no teacher has the right to punish a student for choosing to not make full use of his "franchise" in that class.

A teacher may feel it is unfair for a student to rarely come to class yet receive a high grade due to papers and assignments. This feeling can be understood but to assume that the student is at fault is mistaken.

If the teacher is concerned with attendance affecting the grade, then assignments and tests should reflect the classwork. This would not only punish "skippers," but also benefit students who attend faithfully.

Of course, classes which involve class participation are an exception. If one student's absence affects another's learning, then due penalties may be administered.

But in classes where this is not a factor, there is no justification for an attendance policy of any sort.

Nice to have class in White House

It is nice to have some class in the White House.

Be it smug or pretentious, it was a good feeling to watch the Royal Wedding and feel proud when the first lady appeared. Nancy Reagan, with her refined air and 14 beautiful designer outfits, was a credit to the United States.

I, for one, am glad to know the first lady of the United States is wealthy enough to wear designer clothes and I applaud her taste. The president and his family are not commoners or "plain folk" as Carter tried to relay. They are educated, wealthy people who have, or should have, the respect of people around the world.

I am opposed to the myth of the '60s that it is wrong to be wealthy. There is absolutely nothing wrong in making money honestly. A self-made millionaire such as Reagan is the epitome of the American Dream, a dream that many Americans share.

It is such a welcome break to be proud of the people in power. Carter's campaign for a common White House was an attempt to convince people that the president was not a power-hungry, unscrupulous politician. Well, I think his plan succeeded that far, but in the same breath, the respect for him and for the United States suffered.

The Reagans make no pretenses of being ordinary. But through his unassuming manner and what I perceive as honest and creditable intentions, Reagan has as much trust, if not more, than Carter had. And our reputation has not suffered. The United States is regaining respect every day Reagan is in office.

This respect is not unimportant. A country must have respect to be respected. No one likes his country to be looked down upon, at least no one who knows how it feels to have pride.

So Nancy, keep wearing your "ridiculously-priced" clothing and sway them with your charms. I'll be waving my flag all the way.

LETTERS

'Romantic Comedy'

To the editor:

I know that summertime is a difficult time of the year to find material to fill a newspaper, but I find it ridiculous to use an entire page to review a play. I am referring to the review of "Romantic Comedy". It sounded as if the critic (and I use the word loosely) was carrying out a personal vendetta against the theatre and/or the actors involved in the play. I saw the play on opening night and found it to be a funny, fast-moving, and totally entertaining show.

Cracks mar tennis courts

An errant server may feel he has come up with the San Andreas double fault on the courts next to the women's gym on Marshall's campus. The heat of the summer months has caused the court cracks to expand to the point that a tennis ball can fit easily in them. HPER Chairman Robert L. Case says the problem will be addressed as soon as possible. Photos by Patricia Hale.

By Leskie Pinson

Two of Marshall's tennis courts are in "terrible" condition, according to Dr. Robert L. Case, chairman of the Health, Physical Education and Recreation Department.

The courts, adjacent to the east end of the women's gym, have sustained cracks that have expanded during the summer months. "It poses a hazardous situation that has grown worse," Case said, referring to possible injuries.

"Now that it is a new fiscal year, we can address ourselves to this problem," Case said. "When we get our budget we will look at what money we have for repair and alterations. This is something we plan to take care of as soon as possible."

Another shortcoming with these courts is their length. "For quite a while we have wanted to lengthen the area behind the baselines," Case said. "The court itself is the proper length, but for competitive play the back area is too short. We would like to correct this problem."

Long forms will stay, Eddins says

By Elizabeth Bevins

Among the trifles of registration for many Marshall students is the long form that must be filled out every semester.

When the forms were first introduced last year, Registrar Robert H. Eddins said he thought students would have to fill them out only once. After that, only a short form with class schedules would be required.

However, the plans were changed and students must fill out the long form every semester. "We feel we stand a better chance of getting the best possible data if we ask for this every semester," Eddins said. "Students are not good about coming in and telling us if they have a change of address."

Eddins said he is aware that filling out the long forms is inconvenient and time-consuming for students. Some time ago, registration forms were printed with all the information on the particular student from the data base, he said. The students were given these when registering and corrected things that were wrong.

But this did not work, Eddins said. "We were printing 10,000 forms and using 6,000, he said. "The composition of students changes too quickly."

No further changes are planned, Eddins said. "The less often you change things, the better off you are. People don't read—not just at Marshall, but it's true throughout society. People are creatures of habit."

And as for simple, innovative changes, "You'd be surprised how many of those have blown up in our face," Eddins said. "But we are certainly not above trying to change. We stick to the KISS (Keep it Simple, Stupid) principle," he said. "And it works."

Six baseball recruits 'necessity,' Cook says

By Patricia Proctor

Five pitchers and an outfielder have signed letters-of-intent to play baseball for the Herd next year, Marshall coach Jack Cook said.

Cook said signing the pitchers "was a necessity" for the Herd, which lost three of its four starting pitchers to graduation last year.

"We are hoping they'll take up the slack left by the three seniors," Cook said. Gary Nelson, Jerry Chapman and all-conference hurler Mike Sullivan graduated in May, which left Cook with only Southern Conference "Freshman-of-the-Year" Jeff Montgomery and senior Bret Mavis as experienced pitchers.

Signing letters-of-intent were right-handed pitchers David Clay of Ironton High School, Ironton, Ohio; Keith Hutcheson of Lancaster High School, Lancaster, Ohio; Todd Wullenweber of Oak Hill High School, Cincinnati, Ohio; Robert Pannell of Ripley High School, and Larry Wright of Barboursville High School. Outfielder Terry Thompson of Wayne High School is the sixth recruit.

Clay had a 4-1 record and an ERA of 1.89 in 1981, while striking out 35 batters in 35 innings.

Hutcheson, who pitched in 10 games for an ERA of 1.96, compiled a 6-1 record last year. Wullenweber, a sophomore who will transfer from Cumberland Junior College in Lebanon, Tenn., compiled a record of 2-1 and a 3.45 ERA in seven games at Cumberland and recorded 19 strikeouts in 23 and one third-innings.

Pannell, who earned AAA West Virginia All-State honors his senior year, hit .304 while compiling a 12-1 record with 96 strikeouts and a 1.66 ERA. He also played first and third base at Ripley and lettered three times in baseball and twice in football.

Wright had a 4-1 record his senior year at Barboursville, and a career record of 12-4. He also lettered three times in baseball and twice in football.

Thompson averaged .467, hit seven home runs and 34 RBIs last season for Wayne, and only struck out eight times in 75 appearances at the plate.

"Terry is a good little ballplayer," Cook said. "He has a good arm and good speed and will be a good addition to the ballclub."

Cook said he has two more prospective pitchers, but they have not signed letters-of-intent yet.

Cook signed three other players earlier in the season; Scott Stein and Vance Bunn of Huntington East High School, and son Chip Cook of Huntington High.

WMUL-FM helps establish public station

By Sherry Mitchell

With the help of some Marshall students, Pocahontas County is getting a radio station.

This may not seem like a big deal to some people, but Pocahontas County has not had a radio station because of its Green Bank observatory. This classifies it as a "quiet zone," according to Keith Spears, assistant professor of speech and faculty adviser of WMUL-FM. The observatory receives sounds and radiation from space.

Spears and some of his students went to Pocahontas county to do a study of the area before the station went on the air.

The Pocahontas County Board of Education contacted Spears in 1978 about establishing a station, and allowed the students to use their telephone lines for the impact study.

"This research project is something I've been interested in doing for some time," he said. Pocahontas County has a population of 8,000 and the students received 206 responses to their calls. He said the results would not be calculated until around December and he plans to go back and do another study after the station had been on the air awhile.

WVMR is a public AM station with 1,000 watts, and may go to 2,500 watts, Spears said.

WVMR has three paid staff members, and are training volunteers to work at the station, Spears said. Funding is to come mostly from public subscription.

Spears said the station has no format, but will be mixed and mostly country and western music.

The students who worked on the project were John Finch, David Nicholas, Janet Graber and Rhonda Walker. They were not paid, but got a chance to see the state, Spears said.

Faculty hiring successful

By Kevin Thompson

Hiring academic personnel is going very well in spite of the budgetary problems the university faced this summer, according to Marshall Provost Olen Jones.

"We are making tremendous progress," Jones said in reference to the recruitment process.

He said that candidates for positions are still coming to campus to examine Marshall and many people have been accepted for positions.

Jones said he was pleased with the quality of instructors being considered for employment at Marshall.

"I see no problem for fall, that's it in a nutshell," Jones said.

Women's club invites students to King's Island

Marshall students are invited to accompany the Westmoreland Women's Club to King's Island and the Florence (Ky.) Mall Aug. 15, according to Alice Smith, host for the trip.

A bus will leave at 8 a.m. from Vinson High School's faculty parking lot, beside the school on Piedmont Road. The group will return that evening.

"Marshall students and everybody are welcome," she said. A 44-passenger bus will be taken and people will be accepted on a first-come, first-serve basis.

The trip will cost $30 per person and will include roundtrip bus ticket and admission ticket to King's Island. Reservations may be made by calling Bill and Alice Smith at 429-3883.
