Trespasser

Another citing on women's floor

By Tom Marine

Another confrontation with a male trespasser in Twin Towers West (female) was reported at 7:40 a.m. Friday, according to Marshall University Director of Public Safety Donald L. Salyers.

The most notable description difference worn by the intruder from Friday's encounter and the Twin Towers West assaults during the summer (June 23 and 30) was a "stocking mask."

"He said nothing and did nothing," Salyers said. "He opened the door to the restroom area and immediately left."

The descriptions in the three citings all have similar traits, with witnesses claiming the perpetrator was young, black and male. However, height ranges vary from 5'10" to 6'2".

"There was no assault," Salyers emphasized of the most recent report, which also is a major difference from the summer involvements. "A young black male subject was seen — no contact."

Also, there is no proof the subject could be or not be a student, or is even currently around, he said.

The two previous Twin Towers West assaults took place in the shower rooms on separate floors. A third, and more serious assault, was reported a month later (July 29) when a short, black, male in his 20s struck an MU Community College instructor with a lead pipe in her office.

Salyers said it would be "sheer speculation" to say if the three descriptions "fit."

"It would not serve any useful purpose to say it was one person," he said of the four confrontations. "We're dealing with people excited. Descriptions can and quite often vary quite a bit."

With "time," a main factor in solving the cases, according to Salyers, slipping away, the case becomes harder to solve.

"Time is very important," he said. "Due to the time lapse it complicates and makes it more difficult."

And, although the cases have the highest priority for Salyers and his staff, there have been no major breaks in solving them.

"No, I don't think we are (close to solving the cases)," he said. "Everythin we've uncovered that looked good has faultered."

Leads and two "identi-kit" resemblances of the perpetrator, or perpetrators, have not been released by Salyers. Salyers said releasing the information would hinder the investigation.

The "identi-kit" drawings were done with witnesses fitting separate facial parts together, giving a close description of the person.

"We're not trying to keep the truth from anyone," he said. "I don't want to prolong this thing."

Senate president says Williams 'using' court

By Greg Friel

Student Court, in its ruling Monday, resisted attempts by the student body president to manipulate the judiciary, according to Student Senate President James A. Dodrill, Huntington senior.

The court ruled, by a 5-0 vote, that the Senate meetings of Sept. 1 and 8 were not publicly-announced meetings. The court defined a public announcement as an announcement made through some type of media.

The decision upheld the action taken by the Senate Sept. 8 that extended the deadline for applications for Senate seat vacancies one week, until Sept. 15.

The Senate voted to extend the deadline after some senators said that the announcement of the vacancies at the Sept. 1 meeting was not a true public announcement and therefore few students were aware of the vacant seats.

Student Body President Marc E. Williams, Huntington senior, voiced opposition to the Senate action.

Dodrill said Williams sought to use the Court to justify his personal opinion in the deadline extension controversy.

Marshall requests $27 million from BOR

By Steve Hauser

Marshall University officials asked the West Virginia Board of Regents for more than $27 million Tuesday for the 1982-83 fiscal year.

The request represents an increase of nearly $4 million over what the university received for the 1981-82 fiscal year. The bulk of the requested increase is expected to come from governmental appropriations which are provided primarily by the state.

The most noticeable request comes in the category of equipment. MU officials have requested a 514 percent increase over the current fiscal year.

Marshall expects instructional costs to increase more than 19 percent and academic support costs to rise nearly 25 percent next year. Capital improvement costs are expected to jump almost 15 percent.

President Robert B. Hayes said getting the amount of money the university requests is a problem. Hayes said it was difficult to estimate how much the university will end up receiving because the bulk of the money is not appropriated until the legislature convenes in January.

Relief expected soon for dorm overcrowding

By Theresa Cummings

Current student overcrowding in the dorms will be alleviated soon, area coordinator Phil Ricci said.

"Most of it will be solved very, very soon," he said from his office in Twin Towers. "There are not more than 25 or 30 in overflow. There are no women left."

Assistant Director of Housing Ray Welty confirmed there is overcrowding, but claimed the situation is "not that bad."

The problem stems from the university's policy to "try to house any student who needs housing," Ricci said.

Eighteen men were originally set up in triple occupancy rooms in Twin Tower East, Welty said. Occupants in Holderby Hall who were signed up for single rooms but had overflow roommates assigned to them, will also receive their single room status back, he said.

Committee to discuss grade appeals

By James Perry

Discussion of a new policy concerning grade appeals will be on the agenda of the first meeting of the Academic Planning and Standards Committee 2:30 p.m. Wednesday in Smith Hall Room 810.

According to Dr. Bruce J. Ardinger, committee chairman and associate professor of English, this will be the first year that the Board of Regents will not be hearing grade appeals from the students.

"Before, if a student was not satisfied with the grade that he or she might have received after discussing it with the instructor, chairman of the department and the dean of that particular college, then the problem would go to the BOR."

The BOR no longer wants to hear grade appeal from the individual institution, Ardinger said.

"We have set up a subcommittee called the Review Committee, which will be the last resort in the final appeal stage for students."

The Academic Planning and Standards Committee consists of 21 members. Twelve are voting members and nine are non-voting members.

"Each college has at least one vote on the committee, and since the representation is based on size, there is a difference in the number of votes.

"The College of Liberal Arts, for example, has two votes while the Community College has one," he said.

The meeting is open to the public.

Officials optimistic about enrollment

Tuition increase, aid cuts to have 'little impact'

Tuition increases and financial aid cutbacks are not expected to affect Marshall University's student population, according to several university officials.

Financial Aid Director Ed Miller and Director of Admissions James Harless claim Marshall should not experience a decline in student enrollment for the near future.

"It has an impact," Harless said of the 25 percent tuition jump. "But, I don't think it'll hurt us in the long run. It'll be accepted, but not liked."

The tuition change was passed by the Board of Regents as part of an increase in the Higher Education Resource Fee (HERF). The fee applies to all state institutions.

Miller, too, who realizes a cutback to financial aid will not make it easier on students trying to get loans, is not worried about an immediate pinch.

"Changes in the Reagan administration on students getting loans won't go into effect until next year," Miller said, noting most loans already handled by his department will take students through the 1981-82 school year.

"If aid stays the way it is right now," he said, considering the Oct. 1 change as already installed, "then we won't have any problem."

The financial aid cutback, which will change the "Loan of Convenience" system implemented in 1978, may put a ceiling of $30,000 on a family income in order for it to receive aid, Miller said.

In 1978, before the "Loan of Convenience," the ceiling was $25,000. From 1979 through Oct. 1, anyone attending an institution of higher education could automatically receive $2,500. Thus, according to Miller, came the phrase "Loan of Convenience."

Although the final draft for the cutback has not been completed, which in itself is "sort of hairy," according to Miller, there are expected to be other requirements. A family making more than $30,000, he said, would not be eligible unless the family passed a "Needs Test."

"The 'Needs Test' may even include the family's taxable assets," he said. "It's still up in the air."

"Most of the students affected, particularly MU students, should have no significant problems."

According to Director of Finance Richard Vass, the tuition increase does not jump enough to put a bind on MU students.

"The increase in fees was needed," Vass said, citing jumps from $51.30 to $81.30 per semester depending on a student's resident classification. "In relation to other schools, Marshall is comparable or lower."

The fee breakdown is as follows: Undergraduate resident, $196.35 to $247.65 ($40 for HERF and $11.30 for MU activities); Undergraduate non-resident, $691.35 to $772.65 ($70 HERF, $11.30 MU); Graduate resident, $211.35 to $262.65 (Same as undergraduate resident breakdown); Graduate non-resident, $721.35 to $802.65 (same as undergraduate non-resident breakdown).

"It is probably the largest increase ever," Vass said. "About 80 percent is used by the host school and the other 20 goes to the Board of Regents."

Harless said as far as complaints from the increase, he had a few calls from "across the bridge" in Ohio. Students there, he said, are saying the increase makes it more feasible to attend such universities as Ohio State, Ohio and Miami of Ohio.

"We're still one of the cheapest states, school wise," he added.

Vice President for Financial Affairs Mike Thomas claims rising prices throughout the country to be the main factor for increases in fees.

"They will continue to go up," Thomas contends of the current tuition trends, "the way inflation goes."

Thomas explained the HERF fee is determined by the BOR, while the university can "request" an activity fee increase. Also, he noted, all HERF fees were raised by the same amount at all state institutions.

Still, all items are bound to change on the financial aid ceiling and requirements, Miller said. Just how high to extend the ceiling and specifics on the "Needs Test" are a few, he said.

"The reality is, it'll probably be adjusted more," he said. "The amount of money Congress wants to save won't be saved by this cut. So, they'll be going back."

"The programs could tighten up even more."

But, he added, some "frugal" spending may be the best way to beat the decline of students able to enroll, if there is going to be one.

"Potentially, MU can even grow, because students will not be able to attend out-of-state institutions," he said. "I don't think we'll be affected. We're still an extremely low-cost institution."

Admissions expecting to buck trend

Although future admissions trends are documented to head downward at colleges and universities in non-sunbelt areas, Marshall University's student population will stay approximately the same, according to Director of Admissions James Harless.

The American Council on Education has predicted a decline of admissions for Eastern Seaboard higher education systems, Harless said. The decline, according to the council, is due to fewer high school seniors in the area.

"Only 11 states are predicted to grow," he said. "And they're all sunbelt states. Our decline will not be drastic."

One reason Harless has confidence Marshall will not have a significant drop, generally caused by a sunbelt migration of families in the country, is the university's adult programs.

"We are considered to be an Eastern Seaboard university, and to have a decline of somewhere between 3 and 9 percent over the next 10 years," Harless explained.

"So, how do we combat that? We're going to reach more adults—simply put."

Harless claims Marshall reaches more than 2,000 students, mostly adults, through off campus classes. This brings MU enrollment figures up around the 11,000 mark.

Harless pointed out that in the current class schedule two pages are devoted entirely to off-campus classes.

"We've got to take it (the classes) to them (the adults) and offer it to them at their hours," he said.

Also, Harless said he is thinking about getting programs in which one could do class work through the mail.

"We might have correspondence courses," he said. "You can sit at home and be a farmer in Boone County, and still be a student."

Harless pointed to one factor, which could mean even less of a decline in the number of high school seniors available.

"The only variable—bring kids," he said. "If Jay Rockefeller can do for the coal industry what he hopes to, then we'll have a boom."

Some other ideas Harless has for the admissions program are weekend colleges, which would have overnight housing for adults, and the already installed "Women's Open House." In fact, in six years with the "Women's Open House" program, over 900 women have enrolled in classes under close supervision.

The "Women's Open House" was designed to get more adult women into classes by not being as harsh when looking at American College test scores, former transcripts, and looking more at the individual women's growth, Harless said.

"It's a high-risk situation," he said. "But they're a lot better students than they were before."

"The results have been good," he said. "We have to sell it on our academics. We have to maintain (the higher standards). I contend adults are ready to handle toughness."

With admissions heading towards a low in 1985, according to the council, and then coming back up towards the end of the 1980s, Harless said he thinks programs must be offered similar to this in all the declining states.

"It used to be we would just wait for people to come in the door," he said, noting he didn't expect MU ever to go under the 10,000 level. "Now, we have to market the people."

"Higher education is becoming a business, like anything else. It's the only way to survive."

'Word' Silent

By Ellen Risch

The Thundering Word, Marshall University's individual events team, will be silent this year.

Dr. Maureen Milicia of the Marshall University Department of Speech, who coached the team for four and a half years, has resigned as coach.

Milicia said on Nov. 14 1980, she asked to be relieved as coach at the end of the semester. She was asked by the Department of Speech to stay a semester longer. Her resignation became effective last spring.

According to Dr. Dorothy R. Johnson, Chairman of the Department of Speech, Milicia was "burned out" and could no longer coach the team. She said that no other coach could be found because "everybody is already occupied."

Milicia cited not enough help, little time, and inadequate funding as her reasons for resigning. "I am discouraged by the fact that I don't have the help so that I can take on additional team members," she said.

She was given three hours of release time from teaching by the Department of Speech, but often spent up to 60 hours a week with the team, she said. She asked for graduate assistant help while she was coach, but the Department of Speech was unable to release one from teaching.

She also said she got little funding, spending approximately $3,000 of her own money on the team each year. Additional funding was approved for the team this year, but no additional help or release time was available.

Milicia started coaching the team in 1975, bringing it from 21st in the nation to fourth in three years. At that time she took a leave of absence to pursue a doctorate, returning to the team in 1980.

Both Johnson and Milicia regret the loss of the team. "It brought honor to the university," Johnson said. "If at some time in the future I can hire a coach, I will be very pleased to reactivate the team."

Milicia is "guilt-ridden" over her decision, but said "a person must be true to herself and cannot serve two masters." She said "there is no blame to be had, but someone has to realize that a person cannot continue to give at the level of proficiency that the university wants without concessions being made by someone other than me."

The former Thundering Word team members are disappointed at the loss of their coach. Tina Huffman, Sod junior, said the loss of the team may hurt her major, because she plans to be a speech coach. Missy Phelps, Wheeling sophomore, chose Marshall because of the individual events team. She would like to compete and is confident that "they'll work something out."

Rock Nite scrapped

Rock Nite, a live remote broadcast by WMUL-FM from the 1896 Club in Huntington, has fallen prey to technical difficulties.

The joint venture between WMUL-FM and the 1896 Club had to be scrapped due to a problem in matching up the sound systems between the radio station and the club.

"The response to live program was very good, but the equipment just didn't match up," Cindy L. Martin, Beckley graduate student and WMUL's assistant student station manager, said. "Another problem was not having an engineer present all the time to watch the equipment."

No money was involved in the Rock Nite venture, which had been promoted heavily.

TODAY'S HEADLINES

WASHINGTON — Republican congressional leaders said President Reagan is balking at their proposal for cuts in Social Security and other open-ended benefit programs in an attempt to hold down the federal deficit next fiscal year.

NEW YORK— A broad range of interest rates, including banks' prime lending rate, declined and Wall Street economists foresee further modest reductions in the weeks ahead. The prime rate drop was the first industry-wide move in more than two months but still leaves the business loan rate at a chillingly high level.

WASHINGTON— The Senate Judiciary Committee approved Sandra Day O'Connor's nomination to the Supreme Court on a vote of 17 to 0, clearing the way for her confirmation Wednesday.

HEIDELBERG, West Germany— Terrorists ambushed the U.S. Army's European commander, who escaped with minor injuries in a grenade attack on his car. The general's wife was also slightly hurt in the fourth attack in two weeks against the U.S. military in West Germany.

VATICAN CITY— Pope John Paul II, in his most comprehensive statement on social issues, strongly backed labor unions, urged worker participation in management and proposed a "just" family wage and subsidies that would free mothers from the necessity of taking jobs.

CAIRO, Egypt— Egypt expelled the Soviet ambassador to Cairo and six other diplomats, the government news agency said, a day after President Anwar Sadat accused the Soviet Union of instigating sectarian strife in an attempt to overthrow him.

Center extends service hours for students

According to the current Marshall University Student Handbook, the Student Development Center in Prichard Hall has as its goal "to be of assistance in enhancing the personal and academic development of students through their college years," and Kenneth E. Blue, associate dean of student development, wants to do just that.

So, beginning Sept. 14, various programs in the Center will extend their hours from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., Monday through Thursday, instead of 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Friday's hours will not change.

The center's hours have been extended largely for students who work and can't come in during the day, Blue said.

Blue also said the center was trying to make its services available to the changing student population, which consists of more older, returning students.

Programs and days they will be extended are:

- Monday night: Health Program
- Tuesday night: Minority Students Program
- Wednesday night: International Students Program
- Thursday night: Vocational Students Program
- Monday-Thursday nights: Educational Support Program

Numbers to call for assistance or for information are 696-3111 or 696-2324.

FOR THE RECORD

Women students need protection

Female students attending Marshall University should not have to worry about walking from night class, nor should they fear taking a shower alone in residence halls.

Other than hearsay, women on campus have heard very little about possible suspects who assaulted women June 23 and 30 in Twin Towers West and one woman in the Community College July 29. What facts do women on campus know about the suspects?

Nothing.

A Parthenon reporter was told by Security Chief Donald L. Slayers that security has in its possession three composites of unidentified men suspected in the June and July assaults. But they will not release this information.

Women students at Marshall do not even have a general description of what the man or men look like. How are they to be made aware of what they should be protected against if Marshall security is not responsible enough to provide us with a general description of the suspected assailants involved in the three criminal incidents?

We feel that it is not just a newspaper's job to report these incidents for public knowledge, but it is security's job to protect us and make us aware of such criminal offenses.

Security's effectiveness also is questionable in other areas. Of course, it is understandable that it would be impossible for security officers to deter all crime on campus and to be on the scene of every incident. But it seems that they could be doing more.

We need to know how the man (or men) got into the dormitory in the first place. Security officers are on guard in Twin Towers West until 7 a.m. But obviously security measures should be taken after that time also. The latest incident was reported at 7:40 a.m.

If Marshall's campus is to be safe, security must be of more service to students. And students, in turn, must be of more service to security by swiftly providing any sort of information that might be helpful in deterring further violent incidents.

Parthenon uses FOI Act to request information

In West Virginia, citizens and newspapers have the right to ask for and receive public information under the Freedom of Information Act.

Public information, as defined by the act, is "any writing containing information relating to the conduct of the public's business, prepared, owned and retained by a public body."

"But what does that have to do with anything here on campus?" you might well ask.

The Parthenon has made written requests for information under the Freedom of Information Act to two Marshall University offices.

We requested fall 1981 enrollment figures from Registrar Robert H. Eddins and a copy of the 1982-83 budget request document for Marshall University from Michael Thomas, vice president for financial affairs. Both requests were denied.

They were denied on both counts because the men petitioned said they did not have the authority to release the information we were seeking. To obtain this information, we would have to petition the West Virginia Board of Regents, they said.

This is nothing unusual. It seems no one around this university has been able to release any information without the consent of the Board of Regents.

In the case of enrollment figures, we can partially understand the Board's reasoning. They want a chance to review figures before the colleges and universities lay claim to more students than they actually have enrolled in order to extract more money from the board for their school. Admirable on the part of the board, but wrong.

By mandating that enrollment figures and budgets should not be revealed before a certain date, or maybe not at all, they have been managing news and obstructing the people's right to know.

We plan to petition for this information again.

If we are denied once more, our only recourse will be to take legal action against Eddins as provided for under the act. We are reluctant to go to such measures but we feel we have no choice in this matter of principle and the people's right to know.

Interestingly enough we have received strong support in our actions from a man who believes in an open administration and says he seldom if ever classifies any information concerning the university confidential. That man is President Robert B. Hayes.

The Huntington Police Department released an "identi-kit" sketch to The Parthenon. The sketch is a likeness to the person involved in the July 29 beating at the Community College.

Following the summer incidents, Salyers said floor patrols were "beefed up," but it was easier with fewer students on campus. Now, Salyers said, it would be more difficult.

"We don't want to infringe on the privacy of the students," he said. "They don't want uniformed officers on the floor."

Although Salyers and his office are "not waiting on anything," they are hoping students will not be as "apathetic" as they have been.

"We don't have a crystal ball," Investigator Robert Huff said. "We need someone to call and say what's going on (at the scene) and now."

"The president was definitely trying to manipulate the Student Court," Dodrill said.

Dodrill said he thinks Williams was trying to get the Court to overstep its constitutional bounds and make policy instead of restricting its decision to the question of whether the Senate action was constitutional.

The Court has the power to interpret provisions of the Student Government constitution when an interpretation is requested by the Senate. It also has the power of judicial review over actions of officers and agencies of Student Government.

Dodrill also said Williams had called the Court into sessions when he had no constitutional authority to do so. He said that the Senate made no request for the Court to interpret the section of the constitution specifying the procedure for filling Senate vacancies.

But Williams denied calling the Court into session. He said he merely requested the Court be called into session and said this request was honored as a "matter of courtesy" between the judicial and executive branches of Student Government.

"To an extent, all this was blown out of proportion," Williams said. "My request (to have the Court hear the case) was aimed only at getting the matter cleared up."

"The fact that I had an opinion on the matter one way or another was not important."

Williams said that it was necessary to get the controversy concerning the application deadline settled.

The Court's decision insures that three applications for Senate seat vacancies received since the deadline extension will be valid.

Seven persons had applied for the three vacant seats by the time of Monday's Court decision, Dodrill said.

The vacancies will be filled before Sept. 18 to let applicants know whether they will have to file for candidacy in the Oct. 1 Senate election, Dodrill said.

Among the vacant seats, two will be up for election Oct. 1 and one will be up for election in the spring.

The students who receive appointment to the seats up for election this fall will have to file for candidacy by Sept. 18 if they want to retain their seats.

West Virginia's state-supported colleges and universities are presenting their budget requests to the BOR throughout the week. Once the board receives all of the requests, it compiles a request document of its own which is submitted to the legislature.

Student directories -- speed sacrificed for accuracy

Mid-November is the earliest date that accurate student directories can be made available, according to Marc E. Williams, student body president.

"An earlier date for the directories would be almost impossible," he said.

Williams said because of changes occurring in the residence halls during the first two weeks of school and priorities in the Office of the Registrar, speed must be sacrificed to compile an accurate directory.

The directories are also being delayed because of contract negotiations with University Directories, the company that is publishing the directories.

Williams said Student Government cancelled a contract with University Directories last spring while studying the practicality of providing students with a directory that would be inaccurate.

"We talked to the company about accuracy and putting more pressure on the university to give us help. Renegotiating a contract put us behind."

There will be a 40 percent improvement in the accuracy of this year's directory, Williams said.

Criteria such as profit-sharing agreements, accuracy, quality of work and method of payment were used to select University Directories as publisher, Williams said.

"University Directories offered a flat fee, which is better in a tight economy. Under a percentage fee, Student Government would have made only about $800," Williams said.

Williams said Student Government will collect $3,000 from the publication of this year's directory. This comes as a portion of the money the publisher earns from the sale of yellow page advertisements for the directory.

Faculty directories -- available in October

Publication of the 1981-82 Faculty-Staff directory is projected for mid-October, John C. McKinney, communications manager said.

The directory, published annually by the Office of Communications, contains faculty and staff names, titles, addresses and telephone numbers. The information for the directory is gathered in several different ways, McKinney said.

Departmental listings are handled directly by the Office of Communications, McKinney said. The office checks with the provost on the names of department chairmen and encloses information cards in payroll checks of staff members between the first and middle of August, he said.

He said the departments handle the faculty listings, which come in later.

McKinney said the office sends out approximately 1,200-1,300 cards each year. The office will process about 1,200 cards this year. This does not include the School of Medicine, which processes its own information for the office. He said the information is then verified by Personnel and the Office of Vice President for Administration.

The information is then typeset and printed by the Office of Communications, McKinney said.

McKinney did not know what the cost of this year's directory would be. Last year the directory cost $1,700. McKinney said he assumes it will be the same this year. The office prints 4,000 directories which are distributed by the Office of University Relations. Each faculty and staff member is entitled to two copies. Students may also have a copy.

McKinney said the Office of the Vice President for Administration pays for the directory.

Tennis professionals Gene Mayer (left) and Ilie Nastase (right) will compete against each other at the Cabell County American Cancer Society's Sixth Annual Tennis Exhibition at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Cabell County Memorial Field House. The match between the two members of the Association of Tennis Professionals will be the tie-breaker because they have faced each other twice before with each taking a victory. Tickets are available at the field house and are selling for $5 for adults and $3 for students. Proceeds will go to the American Cancer Society.

Nastase, Mayer to play at field house

By Jeff Morris

When Ilie Nastase meets Gene Mayer at the Cabell County American Cancer Society's Sixth Annual Tennis Exhibition Thursday night it will be the tie-breaker between the two.

The two members of the Association of Tennis Professionals have played twice before with each taking a victory. Alan Morrison, co-chairman of the event, said the singles match will begin at 7:30 p.m. at Cabell County Memorial Field House with proceeds, excluding expenses, going to the American Cancer Society.

A doubles match will follow the Mayer-Nastase matchup and will include local professionals Rob Vigar and Dhan Shapurji, staff members of the Ashland-Huntington Tennis Club.

Morrison said tickets are still available at the field house at $5 for adults and $3 for students. He said anyone making a $150 donation will be able to meet the players at a post-match reception and will get preferred seating.

Nastase said he has learned to respect Mayer.

"He's a very good player," he said. "He has very good strokes and especially very good baseline strokes."

Nastase is an accomplished tennis professional having won every Grand Slam singles event except Wimbledon.

The Rumanian tennis star shares the distinction with Bjorn Borg, Jimmy Connors and John Newcombe of having been ranked a number one player in the world by the Association of Tennis Professionals since the ratings first came out in 1973.

Nastase said the biggest change in professional tennis since he has been on the circuit is money.

"Everyone connected with tennis gets more money now," he said. "The manager, the players, everybody." Nastase said he was unhappy with one transformation that has affected the play of the game itself. "The game is too physical now," he said. "It has taken away the finesse."

Nastase is well known for his on-court clowning which has included mimicking his opponent's serving style. When asked about the recent controversy over John McEnroe's behavior at Wimbledon and the large number of fines McEnroe received from tournament officials, Nastase said that the basic problem was that by their very nature of thinking the English were more formal than Americans.

Nastase said he hopes to return to his residence in Ferriere, France in two weeks. He said his busy schedule didn't allow him to go there very often as he averages playing 17 to 20 tournaments a year.

Mayer has rocketed to his present fifth world ranking, having been rated as low as 64 in 1978. The son of former Davis Cup player, Alex Mayer, he started his move in 1980 when he reached the semifinals in 13 of the 19 tournaments he entered.

He ended his 1980 season by defeating Bjorn Borg and Jimmy Connors as he reached the semifinals in the Volvo Masters in New York. Mayer was also a quarterfinalist at Wimbledon this year.

Soccer team faces 'brick wall' at Wesleyan

By Randy Rorrer

The Marshall soccer team traveled to West Virginia Wesleyan Saturday, and when it arrived, it ran into something that resembled a brick wall more than another soccer team.

The result of the match was a 7-0 Marshall loss, which evens its season record to 1-1.

Marshall Coach Sam Hood said it was simply a case of Wesleyan being a better team that was the cause of the defeat.

"They're in a different category than us," Hood said. "I hear they are ranked seventh nationally in Division II, and in soccer there is not much difference in divisions. If there was an overall national ranking of all divisions, they would probably be in the top 20 or 25."

Hood said the main thing his team did wrong was to schedule Wesleyan.

"There is one good thing about it," he said. "At least it was played there instead of here as it was originally scheduled to be.

"It may sound crazy since Wesleyan scored seven goals, but I am pleased with our defense," he said. "In this game we only got off a couple of shots and our back four players had to defend against an offense that is as good as any we will see all year."

"I think our defense is twice as good now as it was when we left because this match gave our freshmen a chance to play against an offense better than what they are used to seeing," he said.

Marshall travels to the University of Charleston tonight for a 7:30 game and Hood expects it to be a close match.

"I have no idea how good Charleston is," he said. "I know they were 3-8 last year and that they lost a lot of players from that team, but their leading scorer is back."

The last time the two teams met was two years ago and Charleston won 3-1 in overtime. After visiting Charleston tonight, the Herd will return home for four consecutive home games beginning with the University of Kentucky on Sept. 23.

Past problems result in flag football change

By Jeff Morris

Injuries and fighting in flag football last year have resulted in a change in the intramural program.

Thomas A. Lovins, director of intramurals and recreational services, explained, "In a period of five weeks last year we had three girls go to the hospital, and we had one girl who went twice within a short time span. We also had eight guys thrown out of games for fighting."

Flag football will not be played this year on the regular intramural schedule but will be offered for men and women in a tournament as part of the new "Anything Goes," a program which features structured weekend athletics.

Lovins said the double elimination tournament is scheduled for Oct. 17-19 and will have a $15 entry fee for each seven-member team to cover award and officiating costs.

The tug-of-war competition is over as 40 teams battled it out Thursday at Central Field. Lambda Chi Number One emerged as the fraternity champ beating Pike Number One. The residence hall winner was fourth floor Hol-derby Hall as they defeated eighth floor Twin Towers West to capture the women's division honors.

Softball also got underway Thursday as Alpha Tau Omega out-slugged Sigma Phi Epsilon 7-1, Pike Number One hammered Alpha Sigma Phi 17-5 and Pike Number Two defeated Tau Kappa Epsilon 13-7. Softball will continue Monday through Thursday from 3-9 p.m. until Oct. 25 at Central Field.

STUDENTS Active in LEARNING

Organized in the Spring of 1981, the Students Active in Learning (S.A.I.L.) concept was developed to introduce leisure-time recreation and idea-oriented programs for the Marshall University community.

These programs are not normally included in the University's formal curriculum. All of the S.A.I.L. activities will be informal learning experiences. The physical environment will be casual. Since leaders and participants will voluntarily spend their time with the activity, the attitudes will hopefully be relaxed and a true commitment to learning will exist.

The design for S.A.I.L. is to recruit students, faculty, and staff to serve as workshop leaders. Coordination of programs of this nature within the Division of Student Affairs will be initiated by the Office of Student Activities and Organizations. Special emphasis will be placed on also involving academic areas for support and participation.

It is the intention of the S.A.I.L. program to enable its participants to get the most out of these programs and little or no cost to the students. Materials, supplies, equipment, will be paid for by the sponsoring office (Student Activities, Student Development, Career Planning and Placement, etc.) or by the activity participant.

The Office of Student Activities and Organizations, located in Room 2W38 of the Memorial Student Center (696-6770), will coordinate, publicize, handle registration, facilitate some sessions and recruit leaders. It is our hope to have program ideas that will satisfy the entire Marshall University community along with a successful turnout of participants.
