Taylor says faculty needs to read report

Editor's note: This is the last installment in a series of articles concerning recommendations made by the Ad Hoc Faculty Committee on Football.

By Tom Aluise

Faculty members at Marshall should carefully read the recently released facts and recommendations by the faculty ad hoc committee to see exactly where and how money is being used in the football program, Dr. Elinore D. Taylor, professor of English and committee member, said.

In Taylor's portion of the final report, a number of facts and figures were presented, such as the attrition rate among students with academic scholarships compared to those with athletic scholarships.

According to the report, the attrition rate for those receiving academic scholarships was 25.9 percent, while the attrition rate was 48.4 percent for those on athletic scholarships. The attrition rate for football players was 47.8 percent.

In the report, Taylor said the total costs, as a result of this attrition rate within athletics, is frightening.

"Why don't they take football players in, just to play football and not to go to college?" Taylor suggested. "If they're interested in education, there's probably other ways to get grants and an education."

In the report, Taylor said that at a time when economic situations have forced Marshall to consider possible future elimination of two-term summer school and when there is little money for research, travel, equipment, recruitment and repairs, the idea to continue funding athletics at $1.7 million is "unconscionable."

Taylor said football, which spent $573,828 in 1980-81, and is budgeted to spend $639,300 this year, has become an "empire of its own within the Athletic Department."

"At a time of financial crunch, it's ridiculous to spend that kind of money for 30 hours of entertainment," Taylor said, referring to the football season.

She said win or lose the ad hoc committee has the information to "fight the next battle."

Dunbar funeral to be Saturday

Services for Russell C. Dunbar, former Cabell County judge and chairman of Marshall's Institutional Board of Advisors, will be at 11 a.m. Saturday at the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington.

Dunbar, 59, a law professor at West Virginia, died of a heart attack Wednesday morning. He apparently suffered chest pains Monday while playing racketball and was admitted to the intensive-care unit at the West Virginia University Medical Center where he later died, according to a WVU spokesperson.

Although Dunbar taught at WVU at the time of his death, he maintained a permanent residence in Cabell County. He lived in a mobile home in Morgantown with his wife, the former Helen Louise Sikes, Dick Torn, of the WVU information office, said.

Having been academic and community oriented in both Huntington and Morgantown, his death was mourned by friends and colleagues in both cities.

Dunbar was chief justice of the Sixth Judicial Circuit of West Virginia (Cabell County) for 12 years. He also served as a Huntington city attorney and prosecuting attorney for eight years before sitting on the bench.

President Robert B. Hayes said, "We at MU are shocked by the sudden death of Judge Dunbar. The University has lost one of its most distinguished alumni and dedicated supporters, while I have lost a good friend and trusted adviser. Not only Marshall, but the entire community will be profoundly affected by his absence."

Dunbar became a full professor at WVU in 1980 when he left the Cabell County bench, Torn said. He taught a course entitled "practice court," which is a simulated courtroom setting.

WVU President Gordon Gee said,

Russell C. Dunbar

"His loss to the university and the community will be felt greatly, and I will feel the loss personally. Russell Dunbar was not only one of the finest teachers at the university, but he was truly a good person."

Dunbar was recognized for his ability to lead and mold community thought. He served on many community service organizations.

Dunbar also was director of Guaranty National Bank of Huntington at the time of his death.

He was also a former elder and Sunday School teacher at the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington.

C.T. Mitchell, public relations director, said President Hayes will recommend a replacement for Dunbar's position as chairman of the Institutional Board of Advisors to the Board of Regents.

Mitchell said it will be difficult to find an individual to replace a person of Dunbar's caliber.

Friends may call today at 3:30-5 p.m. and 7-9 p.m. at Klingel-Carpenter Mortuary.

Hayes will present fee suggestions to BOR

By Kim Metz

President Robert B. Hayes will make his recommendations Monday to the Board of Regents on possible increases in student activity fees.

In making his decision, the president is considering both the recommendations by the Committee to Study Student Activity Fees, an advisory group, and requests by organizations denied increases by the committee.

Hayes will review the groups justification as to why they need the increases and meet with the Institutional Board of Advisors Monday before he makes his final decision.

The recommendations made to the Board of Regents are usually "rubber stamped," Dr. Joseph M. Stone, committee chairman, said.

The committee recommended that three organizations be granted student fee increases and two denied increase requests. The recommended increase totaled $3.55, which included the Student Center Operations, Identification Card, and Student Activity and Organizations.

The proposed anthological magazine, es calade, was also given approval to be included in the student activity fee by the committee.

The Parthenon and Student Legal Aid increase requests were denied by the committee. Representatives of Student Legal Aid requested to be reviewed next year and representatives of The Parthenon asked that its increase request be reconsidered.

Hayes is also considering a $5 per student per semester increase in the intercollegiate athletic fee in addition to the committee's recommendations. All fee increases will be added on to the $8 overall increase approved Feb. 10 to compensate for revenue lost when the pro-rated fee system was eliminated under a mandate from the BOR.

Parthenon has alternative if fee increase denied

By Steve Hauser

The Parthenon has come up with an alternative budget that will allow it to continue most services it now offers for the next fiscal year if it is denied its requested fee increase, Terry L. Kerns, the newspaper's adviser, said.

"Although we hope President (Robert B.) Hayes will approve the fee increase we asked for, we have come up with a revised budget that will not mean a reduction in the number of papers distributed," Kerns said. "While we can get by, we will have to appear before the committee next year or be in desperate trouble."

Denial of The Parthenon's request for next year would eliminate money needed to complete the new electronic system, to provide free mailings of the paper to retired faculty and for other free services.

Those free services include providing thousands of extra copies of Green Light, the back-to-school issue, to the university at a reduced cost, printing extra articles when there is not enough advertising to warrant the increase and using color when an advertiser has not paid to have it put in the paper.

"The revised budget will allow us to operate without reducing any positions on the paper, decreasing the number of papers printed or hurting the overall quality," Kerns said.

"This is not to say we do not need the money. We do need the money," he said. "Our efforts are only good for one year. If President Hayes does not approve our request, we are counting on the committee's being receptive to our request next year."

MSC faces 'desperate' financial situation

By Jim Hooker

Chances for raising sufficient revenue to cover operating expenses in the Memorial Student Center are slim, according to a memorandum from the Office of Financial Affairs.

The memo, sent by Ted W. Massey, director of accounting, was read Wednesday at the center's governing body meeting.

The memo's purpose was to make the director of the student center aware of the financial situation at the center in time to begin action to deal with the cash flow problem, Massey said.

"It's beyond desperate," Dr. Maureen B. Milicia, associate professor of speech and board member, said in reference to the center's financial situation.

Board members, who have been working toward cost reductions at the center since the beginning of the semester, Wednesday passed a motion giving the student center director "discretion to set the opening and closing hours on Saturdays, bearing in mind the student population and their needs."

So far this semester the board has mandated a later opening hour for the center on Sundays from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and earlier room closings to save on utility costs.

The center's budget has no surplus and its monthly expenses must be met with the revenues taken in, Massey said.

The center's receipts, which are drawn largely from student fees, will be low during the next three months, Massey said.

The $3 fee increase in student activity fees requested by the student center for fiscal year 1982-83 is expected to help the situation, he said.

Williams scraps cabinet reorganization

A plan to reorganize the Student Government cabinet will not be implemented this semester, Marc E. Williams, student body president, said.

"Because of factors not related to the organization or its effectiveness, we have chosen not to implement it," he said.

When Williams went before Student Senate several weeks ago to request approval of his appointments to new offices, he said the reorganization was necessary to fulfill his platform.

He said the reorganization is no longer needed because his administration is finishing its projects and preparing for the transition to the new president.

Williams made two appointments under the reorganization. Senate approved his appointment of Michael L. Queen, Clarksburg freshman, to director of legislative affairs and rejected his suggestion of Troy Acree, Pinch sophomore, for director of administrative services.

Next HERF request deadline April 1

Two requests have been submitted for consideration today by the Higher Education Resource Fee Advisory Committee, according to Dr. Nell C. Bailey, dean of student affairs.

Of the $1,500 remaining in HERF funds, the two proposals request a total of $786.

The Office of Student Life has submitted a request of $433 to help cover costs of a spring leadership banquet for campus organization student leaders, Bailey said.

The second request, totaling $355, would enable the Department of Art to pay traveling expenses and a small honorarium to six area graphic designers to allow them to conduct a panel discussion April 8 concerning what students need to do to prepare for the commercial design field.

Final deadline to submit proposals is April 1 in Bailey's office, Old Main Room 118.

Black Awareness Week events start Saturday

By Lisa McDonald

Black Awareness Week, which begins Saturday, is an event for the entire university community, according to DeWayne Lyles, coordinator of the Office of Minority Students.

"Like most events sponsored by the minority students' office, this week is designed to be a learning experience for the entire university," Lyles said.

Black Awareness Week is sponsored by the Black Awareness Committee of the Office of Minority Students and will begin at 7 p.m. Saturday with a gospel sing at the First Baptist Church of Huntington.

"Billy," a play written and directed by Elaine Blue, director of the Huntington Theatrical Ensemble, will be presented by members of the MU Mass Choir and other university students at 7 p.m. Sunday in Smith Recital Hall.

A seminar entitled "Getting Over is Not Enough: Survival Skills" will begin Monday's activities. The seminar will be in Memorial Student Center Rooms 2E11, 12 and 13 at 3 p.m.

Monday at 7 p.m. the judging of the Miss Black Pearl and Mr. Black Awareness contests will begin in Smith Recital Hall.

A seminar on black male and female relationships will begin at 3 p.m. Tuesday in MSC Rooms 2E11, 12 and 13.

At 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, the future of the black athlete and the impact he has made on American sports will be explored in the discussion "Blacks in American Sports: From Jack Johnson to Reggie Jackson." The discussion will be in Northcott Hall Room 209.

The film "Lady Sings the Blues" will be shown in the MSC Multi-purpose Room at 7 and 9 p.m. Wednesday.

Dr. Charles H. King, president of the Urban Crisis Center in Atlanta and the keynote speaker, will be on campus Thursday to conduct a seminar on racial awareness and sensitivity. The seminar will be 1 to 5 p.m. in the Multi-purpose Room.

He will give the keynote address for Black Awareness Week at 8 p.m. in the Multi-purpose Room.

American Car Foundation on Third Avenue is the sight for this year's Black Awareness Week dance, which begins at 10 p.m. March 26.

The culmination of Black Awareness Week will be the Greek Show March 27. The show will be in the Multi-purpose Room and will begin at 6 p.m.

Except for the dance, all events are free and open to the public. More information may be obtained from the Office of Minority Students.

FOR THE RECORD

Solomon case offers lesson in fair play

We commend the Athletic Committee for its decision reversing the dismissal of Debbie Solomon from the women's basketball team earlier this year by Head Coach Judy Southard.

Whether Southard was acting in good faith when she dismissed Solomon, Karen Henry and Connie Solomon from the team is not the question here. The issue is unsubstantiated charges flung at the girls before and after their dismissal.

The charges, which were repeated at the appeals hearing and reprinted in a local paper, could have easily damaged Solomon's future. One of the accusations alleged a violation of state law.

The Athletic Committee's decision was based upon the idea that one is innocent until proven guilty. Unfortunately, the head basketball coach did not consider the same idea when she raised the charges.

We hope the next time something like this comes up, the coach or administrator involved will think twice before making such unsubstantiated accusations.

Athletic Committee should actively oversee department

The Athletic Committee should play a larger, more active role in the supervision of the football program.

That was one of the recommendations made by the Ad Hoc Faculty Committee on Football in its final report to the Athletic Committee.

We agree.

Too many questions have come up relating to the football program in the last few years. The most recent incident centered on a federal grand jury investigation involving several former football players and a former coach.

The types of regulation we are referring to are not meant to hinder the program, but simply to provide it with operating guidelines.

These policies should begin with funding. Until recently, the Athletic Department did not have an accurate accounting system. Athletic Director Lynn J. Snyder has said the books were one big mess when he arrived at Marshall three years ago.

Specifically, we urge the Athletic Committee to see that the budget contains a breakdown of every dollar spent rather than just broad categories. Such a breakdown should be listed for each sport and monies that go toward academic causes such as tuition waivers should be listed as athletic expenses.

The budget should be audited by an independent auditing agency and the results of such audits should be readily available.

The budget should be a document that can be understood by persons other than Certified Public Accountants.

In addition to financial guidelines, the Athletic Committee should examine a variety of practices within the Athletic Department. Such practices include special training tables, wages paid for part-time work where little or no work is done, special treatment when players are in difficulties involving university rules or municipal ordinances and other practices mentioned by the ad hoc committee.

Steps should be taken to eliminate such practices if they are occurring. Football players as well as other athletes should receive no better or worse treatment than members of other groups which represent the university.

The Athletic Committee should play a major role in investigating charges brought against the football program or any other athletic program.

In conjunction with policing the department, the committee should establish a procedure whereby students, faculty and staff as well as citizens could report possible improprieties involving the football program or any other athletic program.

All of these steps are meant to protect Marshall University and the Athletic Department. We urge the committee not to overlook these recommendations and others made by the Ad Hoc Faculty Committee on Football.

Higher education needs to unify efforts

The 1982 regular session of the West Virginia Legislature is over. Higher education gained nothing.

Although the picture painted is gloom, the session may be a blessing in disguise.

The call went out for raises as well as adequate funds for Marshall to continue offering quality programs. The efforts, however, had little effect since they were carried out by individuals and groups too small to have impact.

A lobbying group sent to the Legislature early in the session also won little support.

The time has come for faculty and staff of Marshall as well as other state-supported colleges to unite in their efforts.

The Board of Regents has proven to students who are using outdated equipment in classrooms that are not air conditioned that it cannot properly represent them.

The BOR has shown higher education personnel going without a pay raise next year it cannot convince the state's leaders of the problems higher education faces.

West Virginians know little about the state of higher education because university and college presidents continue to blindly follow the BOR.

The governor and Legislature are not convinced higher education is important enough to warrant additional funding.

No longer can we rely on the BOR to present higher education's case to the people and leaders of West Virginia.

It is time for a change.

It is time for higher education personnel to form their own lobbying group. The students, faculty and staff have everything to gain and nothing to lose from such a move.

Without this step, the faculty and staff can continue to expect the kinds of Legislative decisions made this session.

Without this step, students can continue to expect decisions that ultimately hurt their educational opportunities.

We urge University Council to take the lead and organize such a lobbying organization. The Legislature has done Marshall University and higher education a favor. It has answered the question: Can the BOR speak for higher education?

Stress, parenting are topics of two psychology seminars

By Bart Norris

This spring the Psychology Department will offer four special seminars designed to help people alter their habits, behaviors, or reactions to situations or circumstances, according to Dr. Joseph Wyatt, Psychology Clinic director.

Registration is open for the seminars which will be conducted by psychology graduate students under Wyatt's supervision. The groups will meet from 7 to 8:15 p.m. weekly for six weeks, beginning March 22. The registration fee for the seminars is $15, Wyatt said.

A seminar in stress reduction will deal with the psychological and physical effects of stress, Wyatt said.

A parenting seminar will offer practical techniques for improving child behavior and attitudes, parent-child relationships, and recognizing a potential parent-child crisis.

"When the Honeymoon Ends: Planning for a Successful Marriage," is a seminar designed for soon-to-be-marrieds and newlyweds. The group will focus on handling the major life events that produce the greatest friction and stress between married couples, Wyatt said.

A smoking reduction seminar will provide techniques for cutting down or quitting the smoking habit, Wyatt said.

Additional information may be obtained from the Psychology Clinic.

Workshop aims to promote instruction in world affairs

By Lee Smith

Workshops to improve teaching techniques in world affairs classes will be the focus of a meeting of state college professors Friday and Saturday at the Holiday Inn Gateway, Dr. Clair W. Matz, associate professor of political science, said.

The workshops will be conducted by six specialists in the field of teaching methods for world culture classes, Matz said. The specialists will speak on new teaching techniques and resources such as films for classroom use and books, he said.

Professors who wish to attend must pre-register for workshops, Matz said. All participants must be college-level professors in the social sciences or modern languages, he said.

The program is sponsored by Faculty And Course Development in International Studies, FACDIS, Matz said. He said FACDIS received a $400,000 grant from the U.S. Office of Education two years ago and most of that money has been spent on workshops.

Matz said the workshops were created to improve teaching techniques of college professors in world culture and to improve the kind of classes offered.

Supporters of bill propose to try again

By Ruth Giachino

Anti-hazing legislation was not enacted by the West Virginia State Legislature, but MU's student body president said he believes efforts to get such a law was at least a partial success.

Student Body President Marc E. Williams said he thinks more people are now aware of hazing problems at colleges and universities.

Delegate Patricia O. Hartman, D-Cabell, sponsor of the bill this year, said she will introduce legislation again next year.

"We devoted much time and money and got further than most people thought we would," Williams said.

Hartman said that the bill was the first reading on the special calendar but due to delays and a very slow process the legislature did not get to the bill before the legislative session ended at midnight Saturday.

"There were four people opposed to the bill," Hartman said. She said Sens. William A. Moreland, Si Galperin Jr., John Boettner Jr., and William R. McGraw did not think the bill was necessary and helped to delay it.

"Next year three of the four senators will not run for re-election," she said.

"I spent more time with this bill than I had anticipated," Hartman said. "But, I believe it will pass next year."

CALENDAR

"Can Creationism be Scientific?" is the topic of a forum 8 p.m. Friday in the Memorial Student Center, Room 2W22.

The West Virginia Philosophical Society will meet 12:30 Friday and Saturday in the Memorial Student Center, Room 2W22.

Art prints will be on exhibition and sale 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the Memorial Student Center Alumni Lounge.

"Oh, God! Book II," will be presented at 3, 7 and 9 p.m. Friday in the Science Auditorium.

Sororities choose Panhellenic Council officers

Building up the Greek system is the goal of Sarah M. Crickenberger, recently elected president of Panhellenic Council, the governing body of all sororities.

Crickenberger, Hillsboro sophomore, said she wants to build the Greek system by planning activities for all of the sororities, working closely with Interfraternity Council, and by getting more interest and involvement in the Greek system.

"I want to make us bigger in numbers, bigger in strength and bigger in influence on campus," Crickenberger, member of Alpha Chi Omega, said. "I want to do whatever I can to build the system by informing the people on campus what the Greeks are doing for the campus and the community."

Other officers include First Vice President Mary Beth Prichard, Wayne sophomore and member of Sigma Sigma Sigma; Second Vice President

Michelle Hale, Huntington junior and member of Alpha Xi Delta; Third Vice President Barbra May, Clifftop sophomore and member of Sigma Kappa;

Secretary Myra Bumgardner, Ballard sophomore and member of Phi Mu; and Treasurer Jacqueline Law, Washington junior and member of Delta Zeta.

Men's track opens with Early Bird Relays

By Shawn Holliday

The men's track team outdoor season begins Saturday with the Early Bird Relays on the Marshall Tartan Track at 10 a.m.

Marshall will compete against 14 teams: West Virginia University, Ohio State University, Kent State University, Ashland College, West Virginia Wesleyan College, West Virginia State College, Centre College of Kentucky, Glenville State College, Kentucky State University, Walsh College, Fairmont State College and Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

O'Donnell said top sprinter Joe Sassler won't run this meet. Sassler was injured during the Southern Conference Championship indoor meet.

"We don't know when he's going to run again," O'Donnell said. "It's just one of those things that takes time to heal. It could be two weeks. It could be a month or it might not be at all.

"We have to move people around," he said. "You put him at anchor and most of the time you're sure you're going to win."

But without Sassler O'Donnell said almost every relay except the shuttle hurdles will change.

"There's so many different combinations his loss has caused us there wouldn't be enough space to put it in the paper," O'Donnell said. "There couldn't have been anybody on the team get hurt that would hurt our team more. He's irreplaceable."

Cris Gibson and Brad Hansen will both run Saturday. It will be Hansen's first meet this season and the first meet for Gibson since the last home meet.

"They're just coming back from their problems so we don't know how good they'll be," he said.

O'Donnell said the thing that will hamper his team most is lack of depth.

Women join men in search of worms

By Randy Rorrer

Worms of Marshall beware!

Twenty-five teams of early birds will invade campus to participate in the Early Bird Relays Saturday at 10 a.m.

Eleven of those teams will be women's and will compete in four field events, six relays and one distance event.

Women's track coach Arlene Stooke said she considers Ohio University and Kent State the favorites in the meet.

Stooke said she thinks Marshall will probably finish in the top half of the competition.

"We have a very young team," she said. "We have only one senior and seven of our 20 team members are freshmen. I hope we can finish in the top five."

Marshall's lone senior is Deanna

Carter who runs in sprint events for the team.

The other women's teams competing in the relays are West Virginia State, Fairmont, Indiana UniversityPa., West Virginia Wesleyan, Ashland College, West Virginia University, Rio Grande and Glenville.

Stooke said she expects her team to be strongest in the sprints and said it now has more depth in the middle distance relays.

"We have a smaller team this year compared to what we've had in the past," Stooke said. "We lost 11 to graduation and we now only have 20 members where we have had closer to 30 in the past."

As a result, Stooke said Marshall will be competing in larger meets this year than in the past.

"It's not fair to expect our team to compete in dual meets when somebody else is two or three deep in an event and we can only put one or two people out there."

Men's tennis season opener at Charleston

By Carol Anne Turner

Tennis coach Bill Carroll expects talented new players to accent performances of the men's tennis team, which debuts today against West Liberty State College at the University of Charleston.

After opening its season today the Herd will remain in Charleston to play Charleston and Denison University Saturday.

With only three returning players and the loss of last year's top three players, eight-year coach Bill Carroll said he will rely heavily on this year's recruits.

"How we finish this year will be relative to how fast our inexperienced kids improve," Carroll said.

Freshmen Bud Vredevel and Dick Miller are expected to man the top two positions. Vredevel was ranked second in West Virginia's 18-and-under in 1980. Miller was 22-0 last year at Central Catholic High in Springfield, Ohio, and won the Huntington City Tennis Tournament in September.

Returners Mark Maher, Mark Elliott, and Greg Olagbegi are expected to play third, fourth, and fifth seed positions, Carroll said.

"Overall, we should be drastically improved by the end of the year in comparison to the beginning," Carroll said.

Herd to host national powerlift championship

By Kelly Merritt

Two Marshall students will be among 222 students competing today and Saturday in the 1982 National Collegiate Powerlift Championships at Henderson Center.

Billy Jack Talton, National Collegiate Powerlifting Chairman and coach of the Louisiana Tech team, said the meet includes 178 men from 29 states and 44 women representing 15 states. He said there are nine women's weight classes and 11 men's classes.

The two students from Marshall are Greg Perry, Oak Hill senior in the 165 pound men's weight class, and Robin Silman, Faber, Virginia, senior, in the 148 pound women's weight class.

Joe Pendley, MU coach and director of the meet, said Kutztown State College of Pennsylvania is the defending champion.

Talton said this is the 14th collegiate championship. Pennsylvania is the most represented state with 49 participants. Most champions either come from Pennsylvania or region nine colleges which include Texas and Louisiana colleges, according to Talton.

The meet starts at 9 a.m. today with all women's weight classes. The second session will begin at 4 p.m. with the men's 114, 123, 132 and 148 pound weight classes. The third session will start Saturday morning at 9 a.m. with men's 165, 181 and 198 pound classes. The fourth session will begin at 4 p.m. with the 220, 242, 275 pound and the super-heavy weight class. The meet is likely to end late Friday evening, Pendley said.

Admission is $2 for students and $3 general admission. Tickets for both days are $3 for students and $5 general admission. Athletic ticket manager Joe Wortham said spectators may come and go all day with the same ticket. The meet will be held in the main arena of Henderson Center.

Warm-up over for Herd-- serious business ahead

By Randy Rorrer

Marshall's baseball team has had its tuneup and now it's time for the real race. The Southern Conference race that is.

Marshall plays doubleheaders at Davidson Saturday and Virginia Military Institute Monday and all are very important games according to head coach Jack Cook.

The Herd had its tuneup on its southern trip where it sputtered to a 1-4 start. "We usually don't come back with a very good record from our southern trip," Cook said.

"We try to use it to prepare for our conference schedule which is more important in getting a bid to the NCAA tournament."

Marshall plays a conference schedule of 16 games, eight at home and eight away. Cook said he expects a team could lose two or three conference games this year and still win the championship.

"One year a team with five losses won the conference, but in 1978 we won it with only one loss," Cook said. "I don't think anybody is really superior in the conference this year so a team may be able to get away with a few more losses."

Cook said he plans to pitch sophomore Jeff Montgomery and senior Bret Mavis against Davidson. Montgomery is the only Marshall pitcher with a win this season.

He said senior Terry Adkins will pitch the first game of the VMI doubleheader and he will decide who will pitch the second game later.

Cook said he hopes his team is ready for conference play, but is concerned with its hitting.

"I just looked at our statistics and we didn't hit nearly as well as I thought we did on the trip," Cook said.

Batting leaders after the first five games are sophomore Dan Culicerto who is hitting .462 (6 of 13) and Terry Adkins who is hitting .353 (6 of 17).

After this four-game road trip Marshall will face seven more away games before its April 3 home opener against The Citadel.
