Mayor-Professor

Alexander wears two hats

By Colette Fraley

Besides being addressed as "professor" within the classroom, Management Department Chairman Robert P. Alexander now may also be addressed as "Mr. Mayor."

Alexander, who has been a Huntington City Councilman for a year, was elected mayor July 1 by the other members of council. As is the practice, the council members select one of their own to be mayor for a one-year term beginning July 1.

Alexander said he does not think the added responsibility of being mayor will interfere with his duties here at MU.

"It depends on how well I manage my time and how well others manage theirs," he said. "I don't anticipate any problems."

Alexander said he became involved in city government because of a sense of civic duty.

"I just wanted to serve my community for four years," he said. "I think every citizen should be concerned about the way his city is run. I had some ideas about where I think the city could go."

Included in those ideas is the continuation of the development of Huntington with the completion of the "Superblock" proposal (a plan for the renovation of part of downtown Huntington), the building of a riverside park behind the floodwalls downtown, attracting new industry to the area and repairing the main access routes (Hal Greer Boulevard, Fifth Street, and Route 2 were mentioned) to the city.

Alexander said he thinks the way to accomplish these goals is to follow a four-year plan which coincides with the four-year term of council members.

"The first year would be a clean-up year," he said. "That would mean clearing up both the messes at City Hall and within the city. It would set the machinery in place for the next year."

The second year's plan is a "fix up" year, which would include repairing curbs and streets and the modernization of City Hall at a "nominal fee," Alexander said.

The third year of Alexander's strategem would be one of building.

River Cities cancels

By Colette Fraley

Local industries' hard times were the main reason for the cancellation of River Cities Summer Scene's (RCSS) final production, "Once Upon a Mattress," Nancy P. Hindsley, director of the Artists Series, said.

"(Because) the climate financially is bad, contributions from industry were not forthcoming as expected," she said. "I think that was the heart of the matter."

Hindsley said Marshall's main involvement with River Cities was through the Artists Series' contribution of some summer student fee money in return for any MU summer school student being admitted to the shows in the Ritter Park Amphitheater free.

Two musical comedies were produced this summer. "Finian's Rainbow" and "Pippin" both played to audiences which were larger than last season's audiences.

Production costs for this season's three musical comedies were higher than previous seasons because RCSS hired a single group of actors to perform the shows, Hindsley said. In its first two years, River Cities hired different companies of actors for each of the shows.

"We bought and brought in the actors from New York City, with the idea of establishing a resident theater," Hindsley said. "It was very costly."

"The budget was too ambitious when the economy was bad. We were a victim of the times," she said.

Despite the financial problems associated with this year's final production, Hindsley said she thinks the community is in favor of the idea of a local repertory theater group.

"I can't—or don't want to—think that Huntington can't support an outdoor amphitheater group in Ritter Park," she said.

"It could be they'll (Huntington residents) support only so much. With MU Theatre, Community Players and the Galleries (already established), there may be no room to support the outdoor group, but I hope there will be," she said.

Hindsley said she was sure of one thing the community would support—a professional job.

"I think people will always support quality, and they received a taste of that this year at RCSS," she said. "Although we don't know yet in what form we'll be here, we will be back next year."

Basketball recruiting

TOM ALUISE

When it comes to sports, people are quick to criticize. Such is the case concerning Bob Zuffelato's 1982 recruiting campaign.

It seems the green-blooded basketball crazies of Huntington were expecting more when Zuffelato took to the road following the Herd's mediocre 1981-82 season.

What exactly they were anticipating is debatable. But when Zuffelato signed three junior-college transfers and one high school senior, after he had publicly declared his efforts to sign Kentucky stars Todd May and Jeff Hall, plus Lamar Oden, a talented junior college player, a number of the MU faithful's green blood began to boil.

Some said Zuffelato and his assistants showed a lack of effort in their attempt to recruit local blue-chip talent (i.e. Jeff Hall and Todd May). Others said they were disgusted and puzzled with the signings.

In a letter printed in The Herald-Dispatch an angry fan wrote: "Zuffelato has compiled a who's that in basketball instead of a who's who." Still, others said Zuffelato settled for second-rate players when he failed to land the more popular May, Hall, and Oden, who were indeed interested in Marshall.

In my opinion, Coach "Z" placed himself in the hot seat when he made public his intention of pursuing such highly-touted players. A low-key approach to his recruiting aspirations may have eliminated much of the flack Zuffelato and his coaching staff received. People tended to compare who Zuffelato signed with who he could have signed.

Of course, there were those who shied away from the pessimistic outlook and favored optimism concerning Zuffelato's recruiting. I was one of those people.

The likes of a Todd May wearing a Marshall uniform was certainly an attractive thought but I have to admit I was a touch skeptical toward May becoming a MU basketball player. Ditto that thought in regard to Hall. After all, Zuffelato was recruiting against such powerhouses as Kentucky and Louisville.

Therefore I can say I was pleased with Coach "Z's" recruiting class of 1982.

He signed four quality players who will step in and improve Marshall's basketball team significantly.

Guards John Amendola and Rod Nelson are excellent outside shooters and will definitely benefit the Herd which has been lacking in that area. They will also add depth at the guard position.

Foward Sam Winley, who was named MVP in three tournaments during his junior college career, will challenge for a starting position. In his career at Jamestown C.C., the team produced a 60-10 record and was ranked seventh last season in the NJCAA. Micheal Dobson, a three-time all-New York pick in high school, will add rebounding strength and scoring off the bench.

It is evident that Zuffelato recruited some outstanding athletes, but how will they do at Marshall? Will they silence Zuffelato's critics and make the thoughts of Todd May, Jeff Hall and Lamar Oden vanish from those sports connoisseur's minds? I think so.

Zuffelato's recruits are pleasing

By Mark Stach

Head Basketball Coach Bob Zuffelato said he is "very pleased" with his incoming recruits.

The recruits: freshman John Amendola, a 6-foot-4 guard from Weirton and junior college transfers Michael Dobson, a 6-foot-8 post player from Flushing, N.Y., Rod Nelson, a 6-foot-2 guard from Birmingham, Ala., and Sam Winley, a 6-foot-5 forward from Queens, N.Y., have fulfilled the team's needs for the upcoming season, Zuffelato said.

He said the recruits will add three dimensions to the team--outside shooting, depth and defense.

The addition of Nelson (16.6 points and 6.4

assists per game) and Amendola, West Virginia's leading scorer as a high school senior at 29.6 points per game, is expected to improve the Herd's outside shooting.

Zuffelato is especially pleased with the added defensive dimension Nelson and Winley will provide.

"Nelson and Winley are both outstanding defensive players," he said.

The recruits will also improve team depth, Zuffelato said. Dobson, who averaged 16 points and 12 rebounds per game, gives the Herd depth at the post positions.

Winley, a NJCAA honorable mention All-American, who averaged 17.1 points and 6.1 rebounds per game, is expected to present a serious starting challenge, he said.

Crank It up

Scott Crank, a shortstop from Paul Blazer High in Ashland, Ky., has signed a national letter-of-intent to play baseball for Marshall next spring, Coach Jack Cook said.

Crank, a three-time letterman in baseball, basketball and football at Paul Blazer, is Cook's fourth recruit of 1982.

"Scott is an outstanding player who could compete for a starting spot next season," Cook said. "He has excellent skills in all phases of the game and his signing gives us the infielder we were looking for."

Crank, a three-year starter for Paul Blazer's baseball team, hit .390 as a senior with three home runs and 15 RBIs. He also stole 28 bases in 1982.

Seven stages of man

COLETTE FRALEY

In one of his plays, William Shakespeare says something about the seven stages of man. But Willie, part-time sexist that he was, neglected to mention the at least three stages of woman.

I discovered this phenomenon within my own family. Here's the set-up which brought the stages to my attention: My mother, who is 18 years older than my sister, represents late middle age. My sister, who is 15 years older than I, represents early middle age. I represent young middle age.

I noticed the differences first when we were reading the newspaper.

Mother reads the obituaries to see which of her friends are no longer among the living; my sister reads the births to see which of her friends are having the living; and I check the weddings to see which of my friends are no longer living free.

Having become aware of this, I decided to take a closer look at the three of us and another distinction reared its head—in our choices of clothing when we went to the mall.

Mother usually chooses to wear a skirt (in case she sees anyone she knows). My sister goes for nice-looking, pressed jeans. And I put on Army fatigues that are about three sizes too big. (Incidentally, I have to guard those fatigues with my life since Mother threatens to throw them away each time she catches them off my body.)

I doubt this says much about the social fiber of today's world. However, in my family, it leads to some interesting trips to the newspaper stand and mall.

Mid-college crisis

AMY CORRON

I've heard of mid-life crisis but mid-college crisis?

I've joined the ranks of thousands of students who reach their junior year of college only to discover they are not quite as sure about their career choice as they were as wet-behind-the-ears freshmen.

So what do I do now? Here I am planning the rest of my life and I'm not really certain what I want to do.

I always thought those lost souls who changed their majors were abnormal. And I have considered becoming one of THOSE abnormal people?

"At least you know what you're going to do with your life," my high school buddies said.

"Sure I do, I'm going to be a public relations practitioner."

So just what is a PR practitioner, they asked. I thought it was someone who worked with people. Then I found out that PR is mostly "behind the scenes" work. There isn't much fame or glory in that.

Maybe I'll go into broadcasting; there should be some fame in that if I became a personality.

I think there should be a class for those of us in mid-college crisis. We could learn about other people's problems and then maybe forget about our own.

And it should be a freshman-level course so we would-be lost souls could just avoid the whole thing.

I'm not sure what I want to do with the rest of my life or where I'll be in five years but you can bet on one thing—I won't be writing columns for a newspaper.

Alexander

"By that time, hopefully the 'Superblock' will be well under way," he said. "But most important, we hope to have some 21st century-type industry (like genetic engineering or sea/space exploration) in the area by then."

"Obviously the building up means we've got to be working for that now. We can't wait until the beginning of the third year to start," he said.

Alexander said the final year would be one of "bragging up" the city and its strongpoints, he said.

Under Huntington's city charter and the council-city manager form of government the position of mayor is largely a ceremonial one, but Alexander said the lack of power was not a stumbling block for him.

"There are times when I would do things quickly and others don't," he said. "That can be frustrating."

"It's frustrating just being on council. But if you can have a broader view and the bigger picture of the situation, you should put one's personal aggravation and frustration aside," he said.

Chief Justice 81-82 is on way

The 1980-81 Chief Justice is on its way to campus and the 1981-82 Chief Justice has a Sept. 7 scheduled shipping date and will be delivered on time, Betsy B. Cook, yearbook adviser, said.

Dr. Deryl R. Leaming, director of the W. Page Pitt School of Journalism, said representatives of Walsworth Publishing Co., the company which is printing the book, contacted him to say the yearbook was shipped July 20.

Hayes not surprised by BOR decision

President Robert B. Hayes said he was not surprised the doctoral psychology degree request was not approved by the Board of Regents July 13.

"We (the administration) were not disappointed by the decision, but see it as an opportunity to improve upon the request," he said.

Hayes said the BOR directed its staff to develop formal guidelines for cooperative doctoral programs in psychology as a gesture to keep the proposal alive.

"This was a positive step on the board's part to encourage the proposals' advancement," he said.

Regarding the BOR decision to ban hazing for both organized rites of initiation and informal activities which are "personally demeaning or involves a substantial risk of physical injury," Hayes said it was an action that develops better regulations and procedures sought after by the public.

August graduation applications are due

Applications for August graduation are due in the dean's office of each university school Friday, according to Registrar Robert H. Eddins.

Students should follow graduation procedures defined by their dean, he said.

According to Debra L. Dalton, Admissions/Records II Officer of the College of Liberal Arts, students must also have a senior evaluation before their application can be accepted.

The registrar then receives lists of graduates from the deans to order diplomas, Eddins said. August graduates may participate in commencement ceremonies in May 1983.
