Gould worried about losing 'quality' faculty

By Rose Hutchinson

Quality and not quantity represent the faculty losses in the College of Liberal Arts, according to Dean Alan B. Gould.

"As far as I'm concerned, it's the kind of individual we're losing," Gould said in reference to 14 confirmed openings in C.O.L.A. He said "high-profile" people are the ones that are moving on for various reasons.

In the 16 departments in the college, eight have been affected by resignations. Gould said there have been three losses in the W. Page Pitt School of Journalism and in the Department of English. All three of the English assistant professorships have been replaced, but none of the journalism positions have been officially filled.

Departments suffering a loss of one person include the Department of Music losing one to retirement, the Department of History losing a chairman to become Dean of the Graduate School, the Department of Criminal Justice and the Department of Counseling and Rehabilitation. Gould said replacements have been secured for the music professor and the chairman of the history department.

Two professors have left the Departments of Speech and Pathology and two positions are open in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology with only one of the four positions being replaced, Gould said.

Recruiting has been successfully bringing in qualified applicants, which Gould said he thought was a result of the general job market. He said there was evidence from interviews that the people seeking jobs are confident and many have had articles dealing with published research.

"It's pretty bad out there," he said. "It's no longer OK to have just a degree."

Gould said that in spite of economic problems in the area and fewer benefits offered to Marshall employees, applicants have appeared interested in Marshall as a future place to work.

"The people are impressed with who they've met here," he said. "Huntington itself seems to be a positive influence and the compactness of the campus has been a factor."

However, Gould said he was concerned more about the long-term effects of the situation. If salaries don't come up, he said he thought there could be serious problems for higher education in West Virginia as well as Marshall.

"Our faculty deserve more money. We (in reference to West Virginians) need to stress education," he said. "The majority of Marshall students are West Virginians and they deserve the very best."

Gould said he did not think higher education could withstand another year of budget cuts and freezes. The smaller schools will probably be facing even worse odds. Because Marshall is within a metropolitan area, Gould said it faces fewer problems in retaining part-time help.

He said Marshall would be able to draw on the community for part-time instructors in case full-time faculty are not hired.

"Classes will not be cancelled," Gould said. "But, we want more than a warm body in the position."

"If we don't address the question of higher salaries and educational expenses," Gould said, "by the time it is realized as a crisis -- it will be too late."

LOW MORALE: Lack of funds lead to College of Science resignations

By Linda Cole Moffett

Morale in the College of Science is at its lowest point ever, according to E. S. Hanrahan, dean of the College of Science.

Hanrahan said the fact that there have been no salary increases for the past two years along with all the talk about furloughs and freezes have contributed to the low morale. An even bigger blow to faculty members came when they learned from the West Virginia Board of Regents that renovation of the Science Building would not be completed as planned, he said.

There have been three resignations so far this year in the College of Science, Hanrahan said. Peng Fan, assistant professor of mathematics, Judy A. Silver, mathematics instructor and Marc J. Bechard, assistant professor of biology have resigned.

Hanrahan said there has been no trouble recruiting new faculty. There are positive aspects to Marshall that are attractive to the applicants, he said.

Dr. Charles V. Peele, chairman of the mathematics department, said the two vacancies in his department have been filled.

"The lack of pay increases is beginning to affect morale to say the least, in that other faculty members have indicated an interest elsewhere," he said.

Peele said he could not comment if other members in his department were planning to leave because they have not said anything to him yet.

The vacancy in the biology department has not yet been filled, according to Dr. Donald C. Tarter, chairman of the biology department. The position will be filled with a temporary, one year appointment, and he said he does not foresee any problem in filling the position.

Tarter said morale is "justifiably low." Contributing to the low morale is the fact that the college will only get one-third of the expected equipment, Tarter said. The college is short on equipment and it is wearing out, he added.

"If equipment breaks down, there is no money to replace it," Protip K. Ghosh, assistant professor of geology, said. "Having always to worry about finances puts a damper on your efforts."

"More depressing than the low salaries is the realization that you are not able to operate classes the way they should be because funds aren't there for the equipment," Dr. James E. Joy, associate professor of biology, said.

One faculty member, who asked not to be identified, said one great frustration is that HERF Funds allocated for specific classes don't materialize. He said the money is gone before it can be spent.

The problem is not just in West Virginia, Hanrahan said, it is a national problem. The public's view on education is to "let somebody else do it."

"It is a catch-22 situation," he said. "People want their children to have a quality education but do not want to contribute by paying more taxes or higher tuition."

"The view of making someone else foot the bill doesn't work," he said.

Hanrahan said at the moment he does not expect other faculty to leave. But he does not expect that anyone will turn down the chance to better themselves, he said.

Some faculty stay on because of loyalty to the school or community, Hanrahan said, but they can only put up with so much, and if the another year passes without a raise, he guesses that anyone who can leave, will.

Dr. David A. Cusick, associate professor of math, said when he sees somebody leaving, he "thinks they're doing the smart thing."

"Imagine a tree filled with fruit," Cusick said. "The longer you shake it, the more fruit will fall. Nothing breaks at once. You can't say the disaster is over--that we've lost all that we're going to."

College of Education spot open, four positions filled

By Debra A. Jackson

Three faculty positions, in addition to the position of dean of the College of Education, have been filled, and a fourth is close to being filled, according to Dr. Charles J. Maynard, assistant dean and assistant professor in the College of Education.

"We're shooting for closure this week," Maynard said. Tuesday afternoon a promising applicant was interviewed, he said.

Maynard will take Dr. Philip J. Rusche's place as dean of the College of Education September 1.

Two assistant professors, one in the Department of Counseling and Rehabilitation, and one in the Department of Curriculum and Foundations were hired. An instructor in the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation was also hired.

A fourth position, for an assistant/associate professor in HPER, should be filled by Monday, Maynard said.

Of the five recent openings, two were due to resignations. Rusche accepted a position at the University of Toledo, and Dr. Robert L. Case, associate professor and chairman of HPER, also resigned.

"We have found it has been a normal recruiting process," Maynard said. Case announced his resignation in May, and the other openings left sufficient time for national advertising for 15 days, he said.

"We are extremely pleased at the quality of the people that have applied. We're getting good, quality people," he said.

"We don't have a problem like with computer science where it's a very competitive market. Though we're recruiting good, quality people, it's not at that level of marketability where 85 schools want one person," he said.

Maynard said that the College of Education offers a competitive salary at the initial professor assistantship position and that to his knowledge, no candidates have declined offers this year because of salaries.

Six positions open in College of Business

By Rose Hutchinson

Six positions are left to be filled in Marshall University's College of Business, according to Dean Sara E. Anderson.

She said there were three faculty openings remaining in the Department of Computer Science, one of the original four having been filled. In other departments the loss hasn't been as heavy but there are still some open positions.

Anderson said the Department of Management has two openings and the Department of Marketing has one opening. She said two temporary positions in the Department of Accounting have already been replaced with temporary employees.

"We've been advertising with flyers to other business schools. We've advertised in the Chronicle of Higher Education," she said. "And we've been interviewing people for the positions."

She said the reason most of the positions are only offered as temporary is because instructors with doctoral degrees are wanted to fill permanent positions. Unfortunately, Anderson said, most of them go directly into industry and business and not teaching.

As far as long-term effects on the college, she said they would continue as they have been in the past.

"We've been successful with M.B.A. people so far," she said, "and we can continue to be successful at that level. We will be fully staffed in the fall."

Jones optimistic about recruiting faculty for fall

"We will be fully staffed this fall with quality people," Provost Olen E. Jones said.

He said Marshall University has done an "excellent job" in filling positions vacated this summer by resigning faculty members.

Several faculty members have resigned even after serving their Notice of Appointment, a form of contract MU uses in hiring faculty members.

"Notice of Appointment is sent to faculty members from the president's office indicating they will be retained for another academic year. They then return these to the president's office to show they wish to remain," Jones said.

Jones said members who have resigned after serving their notices were allowed to move on to other jobs due to various situations.

"You have to be flexible under extenuating circumstances and there are numerous situations," he said.

OURS/YOURS A page of opinion

The battle to keep faculty rages on

HUNTINGTON -- Marshall University suffered heavy losses this week as the casualty toll continues to climb.

Major fronts fell back as reports from Colonels Gould, Anderson, Maynard and Hanrahan came through the battle saying losses were growing steadily. From their reports came tales of soldiers too old to fight leaving the war, while others, seeing bigger and better wars to wage, simply packing up and deserting.

According to the reports, entire battalions have been wiped out while others have suffered such deterioration that their fighting ability is questionable. Journalism, English, management, mathematics, anthropology/sociology, health-physical education-recreation, and speech/pathology have all withstood heavy damage. The Computer Science battalion bit the dust when it was ambushed by industrial salaries. Other battalions under the College of Business front faced similar difficulties as enlisted personnel left for better pay in the market battlefield.

Colonel Anderson, leading the fight for the business recruiting, said they would have to continue on the same level as they have been. Area reserves will offer part-time assistance until high-ranking personnel can be secured for permanent positions.

On the Science battle field Colonel Hanrahan said morale was at an all-time low and improvements in soldier housing were not arriving at the promised deadlines resulting in restlessness among the enlisted. He did say there was only a loss of about three enlisted, so far.

College of Liberal Arts Colonel Gould said he would fight to the last class and avoid cancellation at all costs. Gould argued he would replace full-time military brass with reserve troops and continue operating at full capacity.

Colonel Maynard, replacing former Colonel Rusche, said he had suffered a loss of four enlisted in addition to having to step into the Colonel position. He said the situation is now in control and they have replaced three of the positions on the front. Maynard said the remaining position would be filled by the end of the week and appeared optimistic that qualified people would be found.

In addition to problems on the battle fronts, Gov. John D. Rockefeller IV, leader of the enemy forces, has announced a new economic offensive this week, sending three more divisions into the front. Guerilla attacks further hampered the cause.

In order to combat problems facing the war efforts, suggestions by high-ranking officials have included calling in cadets still in training to take on part of the fighting load.

Lieutenant General Olen Jones refused comment on the situation fearing psychological factors could further erode the war effort. General Sam Clagg, who replaced overthrown General Bob Hayes, offers little hope because the war has little citizen support. Clagg said there is little money for research and development while the battalions and the general economic situation continue to crumble.

Thundering on to greener pastures

Becoming an adult

For most students, somewhere between twelfth grade English and Accomplishment 444, comes a transition unlike any other: a metamorphosis into ADULTHOOD. This process brings about many changes. See if you can recognize a few.

You start looking at wedding pictures in the newspaper before you read the funnies.

You don't understand anything spoken by anyone under the age of 18.

You buy "Of Human Bondage" because it looks like an interesting book to read.

You start to enjoy classical music.

You go up a pants size, but not because you've grown taller.

You stop getting "bills" from Mom and Dad -- they come in the mail instead.

You find out what all those little stamps at the grocery check-out are good for.

You start reading your subscription of "U.S. News and World Report" your Aunt Joan sent you last Christmas.

You declare yourself financially independent and Mom and Dad say, "Congratulations!"

You realize that if you don't make the bed, no one else is going to do it for you.

Recognize the symptoms? Congratulations, you made it. If none of this is familiar, take heart. You're only young once.

Letter to the editor

To the editor:

I enjoyed Cheryl Palmieri's AIDS/Red Cross story--it brought out some aspects other similar stories have missed, and she did a nice job with it.

For future reference, I thought you would be interested to know that the two West Virginia AIDS cases were diagnosed and treated by Marshall University School of Medicine physicians.

The summer Parthenon is looking great (but don't ask how I scored on the bathing beauty test!)

the Park

"Barefoot in the Park," a Neil Simon comedy about a young newlywed couple in their first apartment, opens tonight at 8 in Old Main Auditorium.

(See related story page 7)

The play, directed by Dr. Maureen Milicia, stars Elizabeth Stephenson as the adventuresome bride and Rob Harris as her rather stuffy lawyer husband.

The role of Victor Velasco, an eccentric neighbor, is played by Craig Johnson.

Danielle McQueen is featured in her first non-musical play as Mrs. Banks, the bride's mother.

Others in the cast are Dwayne Johnson, Hurricane freshman, and Michael Harris, a graduate of Marshall.

The set was designed by Warren Brown, Somerville, New Jersey senior.

Assistant Director for the production is Clara Adkins, Barboursville sophomore.

The play runs through Saturday, with performances each night at 8.

Tickets are free to students with a valid ID, $3.50 to the public, and are available in Old Main Basement room 23 or at the door. Reservations may be made by calling 696-2306 between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m.

TV drama

MU students participating in WOWK mystery thriller

By Cindy Parkey

Television is a new experience for Marshall University students, Kendra Egnor and Elizabeth Hinerman. The two are cast members in a television mystery drama now in production at WOWK-TV in Huntington.

Egnor and Hinerman were selected from 200 area performers who auditioned for parts in the pilot, writer and creator Andy Friedman said. Shooting began last week to produce an hour-long original television drama to air on WOWKTV in September.

Egnor said she has had some experience with television at WPBY in Huntington, "but, never anything like this."

"Television is so different from stage work," she said. "There isn't any spontaneity, and you can't cover for your mistakes. Really, it's a very cold medium - but that makes it more of a challenge."

Hinerman agrees that television is a challenge and acting in front of a camera requires different techniques.

"There's no immediate feedback - I'm curious as to how that will affect my acting," she said. "I'm used to projecting for the stage, and with television microphones, there is no need for projection."

Television, she said, allows for less mobility. "You can't move around as much. I have to be careful to stay where I'm supposed to."

Egnor was selected as one of the four main characters in the mystery. She plays Courtney Elizabeth Chandler, a high school student with dreams of being an actress.

"I love the part," Egnor said. "She's so much like me - She wants to be an actress, she's outgoing and happy-go-lucky." Friedman said Egnor's character is "a very ambitious young lady, a girl with dreams."

Hinerman plays Margaret Hamilton, the eccentric manager of the Keith-Albee Theatre.

"This is a really wacky lady with bizarre ideas she thinks will really work," Friedman said.

Hinerman added, "It's a small part, but she's a really kooky character and she makes a fun show even more fun."

Although Hinerman said she is "starting cold" with television, she said she was getting practice by taking a commercial production in the broadcasting department.

The mystery's plot centers around a ghost in the Keith-Albee Theatre. The four main characters "just happen on to the scene and become involved in solving the mystery," according to Friedman. He said the story is a "fun, mystery-type plot for teen-agers and families, created with the idea you can do more than you ever dreamed you could."

Friedman said there are messages for teens in the story.

"I included a grandfather as one of the characters because I think it's really important for teen-agers to relate to older people." He said the grandfather character develops a close relationship with the teenage characters in the story.

Egnor and Hinerman both have high hopes for the mystery pilot.

"I really would love for it to become a regular series," Egnor said.

"WOWK is one of the few stations in the country to try a locally produced project like this one," she said. "That's what's so exciting."

Hinerman said although her part is only for the pilot episode, she would really like to see the pilot develop into a series.

"I think it would be really great for this area and I'm just so glad to have had a part in it," she said.

The shooting schedule for the series will continue for three more weeks at various locations throughout the Huntington area, including some scenes at Marshall. The success of the pilot will determine whether a series will develop, Friedman said. He directed the first week of shooting, but Cathy Jackson, of WOWK, will take over when he leaves the area to begin a new job.

"I really hate to leave now," Friedman said. "This is something I've dreamed of for a long time."

He said he has three other plots outlined to leave with the new producer and said he has hopes of the pilot becoming a series.

"I just hope this turns out to be a super award-winning show," he said.

Drums Across the Tri-State coming Aug. 5

By Cindy Parkey

Huntington will host the fifth annual edition of "Drums Across the Tri-State" Aug. 5 at 7:30 p.m.

The event, which will be held at Fairfield Stadium, is sponsored by the Pied Piper Music Company and WOWK-TV, and will feature six drum corps from around the nation, according to Robyn G. Massie, communications coordinator for the event.

Massie said the bands participating are The Garfield Cadets, Garfield, N.J., The Phantom Regiment, Rockford, Ill., The Spirit of Atlanta, Atlanta, Ga., The Memphis Blues Brass Band, Memphis, Tenn., The San Jose Raiders, San Jose, Calif., and The Pride of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.

She said the corps members range in age from 12 to 21 and are selected for the various corps groups "based on their proficiency on their chosen instrument and their willingness and ability to travel with the group."

The drum corps are composed of rifle, flag, and percussion lines, in addition to large brass sections, Massie said, but usually not any other sections.

"Drums Across the Tri-State" is sponsored on a national level by Drum Corps International, a non-profit organization composed of top drum and bugle corps in the United States and Canada. DCI sponsors a competition each year to select a world champion corps. This year's competition will be held in Miami in August.

Tickets for the Huntington competition are available at all locations of the Pied Piper Music Company and at the National Record Mart in Charleston and Ashland, Ky. Reserved tickets are $6.50 and $6.00 each in groups of fifty or more.

Long-shot might save lives

By Debra A. Jackson

A $25,000 feasibility study being conducted at Marshall University's School of Medicine is a "long-shot gamble" to try to gain a better understanding of a severe kidney disease, according to J. Michael Seddon, physician and associate professor of surgery.

"This is really a small study," Seddon said. Feasibility means one gross experiment to see if there is any practicality to the study. If there is, the investigator asks for another grant to perform a wider range of experiments in a longer amount of time, he said.

The disorder being investigated is chronic pyelonephritis, a kidney disease which is responsible for a large proportion of the people who need dialysis or kidney transplants. Acute pyelonephritis usually occurs as the end stage of a bacterial infection and the kidneys incur a lot of scarring, Seddon said. It is responsible for a significant number of kidney failures in North America, he said.

The disease often progresses into chronic pyelonephritis, he said. Antibiotics are administered at the onset of infection, but do not stop the progression, he said.

Seddon said he thinks, in chronic pyelonephritis, the bacteria may somehow stimulate the body to attack the kidneys as it normally would foreign cells, leading to kidney dysfunction.

Seddon and two other physicians, Ned S. Moss, associate professor of pathology and William Graham, assistant professor of medicine, will study the disease in rats.

The bacteria streptococcus fecalis will be intravenously injected into a number of rats, which will be tested for infection two weeks later, while a control group will be injected with a sterile culture. Twelve weeks after injection, the animals will receive antibiotics. At 21 weeks another drug will be administered. Four months after the study begins, animals from a third group and 10 animals from the test group and the control group will be dissected and the kidneys and spleens will be evaluated.

Spleens will then be taken from the remainder of the animals and implanted into another set of rats to later be extracted and examined for lesions and scar tissue.

The $25,000 study, in conjunction with the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Huntington, began July 1, and will be completed by the end of the year, Seddon said. Preliminary results should be available by March.

Medical school fills entering class quota

By Cindy Parkey

All 48 positions for the entering class of the Marshall University School of Medicine have been filled, according to Cynthia Warren, assistant director of admissions for the medical school.

Of the 48 new students, 36 are men, and 12 are women. Thirty-four students are beginning with bachelor's degrees, 11 with master's degrees, and three with doctoral degrees.

The new students represent seven colleges and universities in West Virginia. They include graduates from Marshall, West Virginia University, West Virginia State College, Fairmont State College, The University of Charleston, West Virginia Wesleyan College and West Virginia Institute of Technology.

Warren said the first-year class will have a total of 50 students, including the 48 new students.

"One of the most interesting things about this year's entering class is its age," she said. "The average age is 26.1 years, quite a jump over last year's average age of 24.9 years." She said the new students range in age from as young as 21 to as old as 41.

Smith Hall break-ins continue

By David Neff

Burglars broke into Marshall University Smith Music Hall for the fourth week in a row and two suspects are being investigated, according to Robert N. Huff, investigator for MU Security.

He said it is possible that they are the same people that broke in the previous two weeks. They broke into the same room and used the same means of entry, he added.

"As far as we know they took nothing," Huff said. "Mr. Miller (whose office was broken into) is out of town and we haven't had a chance to talk to him."

He said nothing can be said about the two possible suspects right now because the incident is still under investigation.

Extra security measures are being instituted by security and plant operations to prevent future break-ins, he said.

Donald L. Salyers, director of public safety, said, "The only thing we can do is check the building as often as possible. As far as making the building more secure, that is the job of plant operations."

"Entry was gained through the small windows in the doors by prying out the molding, lifting out the glass and opening the door from the inside," according to Harry Long, director of plant operations.

"We are covering the windows of the doors so that unless they want to tear the door down, they can't get in.

"We figured that it was a one-time shot (after the first incident) and that through surveillance they wouldn't be able to do it again. But apparently we were wrong," Long said.

"As of now, we haven't recovered anything, but we are still hopeful," Huff said.

MU play signals a beginning, end

By Jeff Seager

With the performance this week of Neil Simon's "Barefoot in the Park," Marshall University Theatre marks a beginning and an end.

Dr. Maureen Milicia, associate professor of theatre, will be directing her first Marshall production, while Craig Johnson will be performing in his last.

Milicia is excited and "a little bit apprehensive" about directing what she believes is Simon's best work, but said she grows more confident with each rehearsal.

"At first I thought 'Can we do it?' Now I'm mainly concerned with the quality of the performance," Milicia said.

Milicia returns to directing after 20 years during which her primary interests have been broadcasting, writing and designing shows for instructional television.

Johnson is a veteran performer in Marshall productions such as "Romeo and Juliet," "Grease," "Bus Stop," "A Miss In Her Teens," and most recently in "Deathtrap."

His characterizations have earned him critical acclaim locally and nationally.

"Craig has the ability to change characters, to transform himself," Milicia said. "That makes him more salable as a performer."

He said he is uncertain about his immediate future, but that he will more than likely follow up on offers he has had to play in repertory theatre in the New York area.

"Repertory companies are really nice to learn in, and I still have a lot to learn -- a lot to learn."

IN BRIEF

Committee begins search

The search and screening committee to make recommendations to the West Virginia Board of Regents for the job of Marshall president met and received guidelines on the screening process Tuesday.

The committee, which consists of the Institutional Board of Advisors and six temporary members -- three faculty and three BOR appointees -- acquired a statement of the responsibilities of the university president and a mission statement from Bill Walsh, personnel director of the Board of Regents.

The committee also named a three-member subcommittee to create criteria by which applicants would be judged.

The committee's next scheduled meeting is 2 p.m. Aug. 9 in the President's Dining Room in the Memorial Student Center.

Jay orders cuts, lifts freeze

CHARLESTON -- Gov. John D. Rockefeller IV imposed a 3 percent spending cut Friday on all state agencies based on projections that his administration's early revenue estimates will prove overly optimistic.

While ordering agency heads to cut spending, the governor lifted a hiring freeze that had been in effect since November. He also lifted a freeze on equipment purchases and "valid" promotions, but he said a freeze on merit pay increases will remain in effect.

Acting MU President Sam Clagg said the freeze will take $576,810 that the school had expected to spend on utilities.

"Last year we had $2.9 million for current expense and only used $2.4 million," he said. "We think we can get through the year without it if we're prudent."

Health services available

By Sandra Joy Adkins

John Marshall Medical Services Inc. That name might sound especially awesome to students just starting to attend Marshall but according to Faye Bandi, assistant administrator for clinical affairs, using the student health service is easy if the proper steps are followed.

Treatment at Student Health is free with a validated Marshall ID. Bandi stressed that the card must be validated because that is the only way to make sure the patient is currently enrolled as a student.

She said students who come to get treatment for the first time need to register at the front desk, get a green ID card and then go to Student Health.

"Although we do some family planning and allergy treatments, the most common complaints from students are minor illnesses, flu and sprained ankles," Bandi said. "If a student needs to come for family planning, it is best to make an appointment since that is something that can be planned in advance."

Bandi said efforts are made to keep waiting time at a minimum and that the smaller volume of students in the summer helps.

Mondays are usually busy, she said, and the 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. rush tends to increase waiting time.

Bandi said the chances of not having to wait are better if students could come to the clinic early before class. Students Health opens at 8 a.m.

John Marshall Medical Services Inc. is now closed on Sundays.

Red Cross issues emergency appeal

By Debra A. Jackson

An emergency appeal for qualified donors of all blood types to give blood has been issued, according to Steve Saffel, spokesperson for the American Red Cross Blood Services/Tri-State Region.

"We need 732 units of blood to bring the available supply back to the safe level," he said. In addition, 288 units a day are needed to supply 51 counties in West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky, he said.

Extended hours for today and Friday are: 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the blood center located at 1111 Veteran's Memorial Blvd., behind the Pied Piper.
