Moore should keep his vows, Matheny says

By Abbey Dunlap
Reporter

West Virginia's 60,000 college students should hold Gov. Arch A. Moore to his promise that this will be the year for higher education to be the state's top priority, said Helen Matheny, Marshall's representative on the Student Advisory Council to the Board of Regents.

"It's been said that the governor says this is the year for higher education," Matheny said. "Students need to hold him to that."

Matheny, a member of the Student Advisory Council's Legislative Affairs Committee, said students need to address the governor and let him know they support higher education.

Students may show their support by writing or calling the governor at 1-800-227-4865, Matheny said.

Matheny said it is crucial that students let the governor know higher education needs increased funding before he gives his State of the State address.

"It's difficult for the Legislature to make drastic changes from the governor's budget proposal in his address," Matheny said.

She said the Legislative Affairs Committee has pinpointed three goals it wants to pursue during the 1987 session.

The committee's top priority is to lobby for full funding of the West Virginia Higher Education Grant Program.

"West Virginia has one of the lowest college-going rates in the nation," Matheny said. "Yet, 1,800 students were fully qualified applicants for this program last year, but money was not available. We feel there is a real need for funding of this program."

The committee's other objectives are to lobby for full funding of faculty and classified staff schedules and also increased faculty and capital improvements.

Although the Legislative Affairs Committee is still developing lobbying strategies, Matheny said members are attempting to get organized to speak to legislators before the session begins.

Homecoming opens with music, pizza

Popular performers order of the day on Coffeehouse Homecoming agenda

By Kathy Kilburn
Reporter

Music and pizza eating will highlight today's Homecoming festivities at Memorial Student Center.

Singer Jim McGill, back by popular demand, will perform on the student center plaza from 11 a.m. to noon. McGill appeared at the Coffeehouse in February.

■ Homecoming Candidates, Page 5

Following McGill's show there will be a pizza-eating contest and free Pepsi and Gino's pizza will be available.

At 9 p.m. veteran Coffeehouse entertainer Rob Harris will once again take the stage at the campus pub.

Monday in the student center Mayor Robert R. Nelson, a Marshall alumnus, proclaimed Oct. 20-25 Homecoming Week.

Nelson urged students to get excited about Homecoming and the celebration of Marshall's 25th anniversary as a university.

After Nelson's proclamation, the Homecoming Queen attendants and court were announced.

The Marshall Jazz Band played several numbers for the student traffic running through the lobby. The band performed tunes from Sesame Street and The Flintstones, while students ate free cake provided by the Homecoming committee.

Monday night comedian David Naster performed in the Coffeehouse.

Commission's decision leaves med school in bind

By Brent Cunningham
Special Correspondent

Friday's decision by the Cabell County Commission not to approve the restructuring of Cabell Huntington Hospital has left Lester Bryant, dean of the School of Medicine, searching for an alternate source of funding for the ambulatory clinic that was supposed to evolve out of the hospital's change in status.

Following the commission's 2-1 vote, with commissioner Forest Underwood casting the only vote in favor of restructuring, hospital administrators returned to the hospital to evaluate its current status and find other ways to maintain its commitment to improving health care in Cabell County.

Meanwhile, Bryant said he felt a sense of urgency to find a new source of funding for the clinic. If the restructuring to a private, nonprofit entity had been approved, the city and county would have received $3 million, representative of their initial investment when the hospital was formed, and this was to be used to fund the clinic.

"If I don't have something for the accreditation team in November, I would say our accreditation would be in jeopardy," Bryant said. When the medical school received accreditation last spring by the Liaison Commission on Medical Education, Bryant showed the team a document signed by County Commission President Ted Barr and Mayor Robert Nelson stating that Marshall would get a clinic out of the restructuring. The next accreditation visit will be November 1988.

Calling the decision a setback, Bryant said, "This was one possible source of funding that we lost; now we will have to look elsewhere. We must have the clinic to be reaccredited."

Commissioner Robert Hayes voted against the restructure because he said it would not be in the best interest of Cabell County. He questioned the escalating patient charges and said the hospital has never made clear what it must do that cannot be done under its present structure.

Barr, who casted the deciding vote, said he didn't know if his was the right decision, but said it came after exhaustive research. He said he didn't believe $3 million was adequate consideration for the county and city investment.

One area of John Marshall Medical Services that may suffer in the quest for funding for the clinic is indigent care for those who cannot afford to pay their own hospital bills, according to Bryant. "Last year we spent $2.2 million on indigent care. If it was solely up to the doctors they would work for nothing, but I can't ask nurses to work for free, and utilities and supplies do cost something. We may have to cut the amount of indigent care if we are to find the funds for the clinic."

General Motors to pull out of South Africa

DETROIT - General Motors Corp. will withdraw from South Africa and sell its operations to a group headed by management there, GM Chairman Roger B. Smith said Monday.

"Decisions about our investment in South Africa have depended on an assessment of the economic, social and political environment in that area," Smith said.

Earlier, a GM spokesman in South Africa said the automaker was reassessing its position in view of the country's economic recession.

"GMSA (General Motors South African Ltd.) has been losing money for several years in a very difficult South African business climate and, with the current structure, we could not see our operations turning around in the near future," Smith said in a prepared statement.

GM is suffering from losses not stemmed by deep-discount sales incentives it offered from late August to early October to clear out its inventory backlog in the United States.

The No.1 U.S. automaker is expected to show a third-quarter operating loss ranging from $100 million to $1 billion when results are released later this week. Ford, the No.2 U.S. automaker, is expected to show a profit, the industry journal Automotive News reported in today's editions.

Smith said the proposed sale also was a result of the South African government's slowness in eliminating apartheid.

"The ongoing economic recession in that country, along with this lack of progress has made operating in the South African environment increasingly difficult," Smith said.

U.S. corporations operating in South Africa have long been the center of the debate on how to exert pressure on the government to change the apartheid system.

By law and custom, apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which the 24-million black majority has no vote in national affairs. The 5-million white minority controls the economy and maintains separate districts, schools and health services.

W.Va. couple's custody appeal rejected by U.S. Supreme Court

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday refused to hear an appeal by a West Virginia couple stripped of parental rights to a daughter after their young son died from excessive spanking at a self-styled Christian commune.

The court let stand earlier rulings that Stuart and Leslie Green, former residents of a Jefferson County religious commune called Stonegate, properly were denied legal custody of their daughter Tiffany. The high court said it had no jurisdiction to overturn the decisions by lower courts in the case.

Soviets offer to define their 'Star Wars' proposal

WASHINGTON - The Soviets have told the White House they would like to reopen the discussion on testing of "Star Wars," the issue on which a nuclear arms control agreement faltered at the summit talks, spokesman Larry Speakes said Monday.

"We have had at least some representation from the Soviet Union that they would like to discuss further their interpretation of, and our understanding of their paper that they presented at Reykjavik which talked about laboratory testing," Speakes said. "We would be anxious to discuss it with them at Geneva and attempt to clarify," he added.

Yitzhak Shamir takes over as prime minister of Israel

JERUSALEM - Parliament Monday gave Yitzhak Shamir and his proposed 25-member Cabinet an overwhelming vote of confidence and he was sworn in as Israel's ninth prime minister.

The vote was passed by a show of hands, with 82 legislators voting in favor, 17 against and three abstaining.

Glancing back

Marshall College 1946.

Marshall renews the tradition of Homecoming after four years of postponement as the result of World War II. The Parthenon, then a broadsheet, publishes a special Saturday edition Nov. 16 featuring front-page mug shots of eight Homecoming Queen finalists, four of which will represent her respective class and will be selected by Student Council following the Homecoming game that afternoon.

Also appearing on page one is a story by Parthenon Sports Editor Ernie Salvatore, now a well-known sports columnist for The Herald-Dispatch. He writes that, despite the Herd's disappointing season and its recent loss to Murray State, head coach Cam Henderson — also head basketball coach — is optimistic that the team will be able to pull out a Homecoming victory against "the powerful Morehead College Eagles."

Also big news: Student Council votes to contribute an additional $50 for draperies in the Shawkey Student Union (which was torn down and replaced with Memorial Student Center in the early 1970s.) Council also passes a resolution that members who miss meetings without a legitimate excuse will be asked to resign.

Other stories in the bi-weekly published campus newspaper include three veterans who set up a laundry business in the basement of Old Main and the formal installation of Lambda Chi Alpha, "Marshall's newest national fraternity."

Sketches of handsome men with high cheek bones and shapely, wavy-haired women advertise tweed topcoats and top hats and tailored suits, all the rage following the war.

A former Parthenon editor writes a guest commentary in which he advises students to take more basic courses in everything from economics to astronomy and to take more than one foreign language because "we spend too much time in learning how to work and not enough time at learning how to live."

And, finally, a Parthenon editorial welcomes alumni to campus, cheerfully expounding that "together we may be able to build Marshall into a university, something we can really be proud of."

The sign is gone!

We don't know where it went, but it's gone.

Yes, that absurd "Welcome to Marshall but don't come in" sign that used to hang on the pillar in front of Old Main has disappeared.

We don't know if it left honestly or if somebody stole it. According to Harry Long, director of plant operations, it was taken by "people unknown."

We're glad someone finally had the sense to purge us of it.

Thank you.

Notable quote

"They thought I was too young to drive. Even now, at 19, if I went to buy a beer, they wouldn't sell it to me because I'm too young. Yet if I shot someone, I'm not too young anymore. Hey, make up your mind," said Wayne Thompson, who was 15 when he was arrested for murder and is one of 33 juvenile criminals on death row.

Barr, Hayes can take a bow but should move quickly on

Cabell County commissioners Ted T. Barr and Robert B. Hayes took a gutsy stand during Friday's commission meeting.

Despite heavy criticism, the two refused to authorize the transfer of Cabell Huntington Hospital on the grounds that a number of questions about the deal had not been answered to their satisfaction.

As officials elected to represent and protect the public, they acted responsibly, unlike Commissioner Forest "Spike" Underwood who voted for the deal though he admitted during a heated condemnation of delaying the transfer that he didn't fully understand the agreement.

But the thumbs down Hayes and Barr gave the transfer has left Lester Bryant, dean of Marshall's medical school, in a bind.

To remain accredited, the medical school needs an ambulatory care center to give students emergency room experience.

During the school's last accreditation inspection earlier this year, Bryant was able to secure accreditation by showing members of the Liaison Commission on Medical Education inspection team a letter signed by Barr and Huntington Mayor Robert R. Nelson promising that if the transfer were approved, Marshall would get $3 million to build just such a center.

The $3 million would have come from the hospital's reimbursement to the city and county for their initial investment when the hospital was built.

But now the deal has fallen through, and the LCME inspection team is due to return in November 1988.

By that time, Bryant needs either to have the center built or have something to convince inspection team members that it will be built in the very near future.

If he does not, he admits the school's accreditation will be "in jeopardy."

So though Barr and Hayes acted responsibly, now is no time for them to be resting on their laurels.

They voted down the transfer because they had some questions they wanted answered.

It's time for them to get busy and find the answers to those questions so a compromise can be reached, the transfer can proceed and Marshall can build an ambulatory care center.

Autism center clarifications

To the editor:

I want to compliment you for publishing the story of John, a four-year-old boy with autism. However, I also need to correct a few misunderstandings.

First of all, John, who began training in February, was not the Autism Training Center's first client. In fact, the Autism Training Center (ATC) has been serving individuals with autism throughout West Virginia since 1984.

Second, John's services have actually been provided by the Preschool Training Project (PTP), a federally funded program that is associated with the ATC but is financially and programmatically autonomous.

In some respects, the confusion between the Autism Training Center (directed by Gabrielle du Verglas) and the Preschool Training Project (coordinated by Frank Robbins) is understandable. Both projects serve people with autism, both projects are housed on the third floor of Old Main, and both projects are part of Marshall's College of Education. In addition, the two projects work to complement each other in a collaborative effort to provide the best "state-of-the-art" services available. However, there are also many differences. The ATC is a state-funded agency serving individuals of all ages across the state. In contrast, the PTP is a grant-supported project designed to demonstrate an innovative training model for a limited number of preschool-age children. The projects have separate staff, funding sources, catchment areas, advisory boards, and to some extent, different objectives.

Finally, I'd like to mention that the Autism Training Center and the Preschool Training Project represent a unique and special resource for Marshall students. Students who are interested in learning about autism and related disorders will find opportunities to enroll in regularly scheduled classes or to become directly involved as a volunteer or training assistant. These are opportunities that are not available on most college or university campuses. If you are interested, or even just curious, we urge you to contact the Autism Training Center (696-2332) or the Preschool Training Project (696-6661).

Christmas jobs available through placement center

By Jill Jackson
Reporter

More than 200 Christmas part-time jobs are available for students through the Career Planning and Placement Center, according to Student Job Coordinator Sue Edmonds.

Edmonds said the part-time jobs, which include sales, inventory, warehouse, stock clerks and costume workers dressing as Santa Claus, are being offered by local businesses.

"Some students think by working for a business during Christmas it is their foot in the door, and they are absolutely right," Edmonds said.

Employers want to train students and have a work schedule prepared before the day after Thanksgiving, which is unofficially the first day of Christmas shopping, according to Edmonds. "The businesses are busy before that day, but on this day it seems as if there business explodes," she said.

Edmonds will not give out the names of businesses hiring for fear students will apply without going through the placement center. She said students need to get a referral slip from her and take it with them when they go for an interview. She also said students going through the center have a better chance of finding a job.

Edmonds said there were two problems with the Christmas jobs. "One of the problems is that employers will not even talk to students who go home during the holidays because they do not want to lose an employee during their peak retailing season," she said. Another problem, according to Edmonds, is that during the busy season employers want the students to work when they need them. "They do not realize that this is also a busy time for the students because they are finishing a semester of school. The students need to pace themselves with work and school," she said.

Students call writing mandate a gatekeeper

By Virginia R. Dunlap
Reporter

Students have a favorable attitude about the College of Liberal Arts writing proficiency requirement and are taking it seriously, according to the college dean.

Dr. Alan Gould said students have a favorable attitude about the requirement because they do not want to graduate from college to find they cannot write.

Gould said the requirement encourages good writing across the curriculum and checks the department to make sure it is fulfilling its duty. "The students, instructors and departments are all being judged," he said.

Although requirements differ for departments within the college, certain basic stipulations are the same, Gould said. Departments must develop policies to cover the general statement that degree candidates must satisfactorily complete an upper division writing requirement of 2,000 words in English in their major subject.

Departments administer the requirement, preferably in the student's junior year, but no later than the first semester of the senior year, he said. Departments also determine the procedure for submission and the criteria for examination. Some departments, such as history, allow their majors to meet the requirement upon completion of a required paper in a particular class, Gould said.

Gould said reports from people who have hired recent college graduates complained they did not know how to write and this was not only Marshall but was nationwide. "All we're doing is just satisfying ourselves that our graduates know how to write well enough to satisfy the faculty within their major," he said.

Speed reading class starts Wednesday

A one-hour course on speed reading, which is offered by the Community College, will begin Wednesday at 6:30 p.m.

The course will last eight weeks and is designed to help readers increase speed of comprehension by learning reading strategies and knowing when to apply them.

"The class is especially helpful to students who will deal with loads of material that must be proof-read during their careers," said Nedra Lowe, acting director of developmental and general studies.

The objective of the course is to have students double their words per minute while maintaining or improving their comprehension skills.

The words per minute rate is determined by taking the Nelson Denny Reading Test. After the words per minute rate is determined, students will learn how to scan specific information rapidly and skim to obtain general familiarity with the contents.

They will then practice six scanning patterns and select one of those which best suits their needs.

Students are also taught how to organize reading content for easier recall and to learn the technique of survey reading.

The class is free for full-time students. Those who are interested may contact the Community College before Wednesday.

Both Dailey and Matheny said that sharing the lime light this week won't take away the honor when one is chosen to be queen.

"There is no second best, either Homecoming Queen or runner-up is an honor," Dailey said.

Dailey said her mother, Ann Mullarky, was a runner-up for Homecoming Queen when she attended Marshall.

Requirements, lack of interest cancel cyto associate degree

By Michelle L. Nolte
Reporter

This is the final semester the associate degree in cytotechnology will be offered, although the bachelor's program will remain, according to Bruce J. Brown, chairman of Department of Clinical Laboratory Sciences.

The decision for the drop was made by Brown and has been passed to the Board of Regents for final consideration. The two-year option is being removed because the certifying board of the American Society of Clinical Pathologists requires a bachelor's degree before a student can take the test for certification, Brown said.

This causes no real change in the program since most students enter the bachelor's program and the phasing out of the program has been planned for several years, Brown said.

Another change in this department is the addition of the option for its fourth-year students to attend Charleston Area Medical Center for clinical training.

This would expand the available program since Cabell Huntington Hospital only accepts four students for their program and CAMC will be accepting eight additional students, Brown said.

With this option, students who finish mid-year with their requirements may begin classes at CAMC in January without having to wait until Cabell Huntington classes begin in June.

This is good for students who are interested in this field because no other school in West Virginia offers this curriculum, Brown said.

Harlem review to represent black culture during '20s

By Lori A. Aprea
Reporter

"Harlem Heyday," a Vaudeville review of the '20s, will be presented Wednesday by Afri Productions of New York, who will perform song and dance selections representative of black culture during the prohibition period.

Sponsored by the Office of Minority Students, numbers will include songs from such performers as Josephine Baker and Jesse Smith.

Following the 8 p.m. performance at Old Main Auditorium, a reception is planned for the Alumni Lounge at the Memorial Student Center, according to Connie Chapman, OMS secretary.

Admission to both the musical performance and the reception are free, Chapman said.

In addition to "Harlem Heyday," the OMS is sponsoring a trip to the Ebony Fashion Fair Oct. 29 at the Charleston Municipal Auditorium.

The fair will feature clothing from various sponsors of Ebony magazine.

The charge for attending the fair is $13, which includes transportation to Charleston, a ticket to the fair, and a six month subscription to Ebony magazine, Chapman said.

Students interested in attending the fair should bring their money to the OMS Friday before 4:30 p.m.

Herd thunders for conference title

Marshall in second place tie with Western Carolina

By John Tolarchyk
Sports Editor

With only four games left in the 1986 season, the Southern Conference championship is still up for grabs with four teams, including the Herd, in the running for the championship.

With Herd's win against East Tennessee State University and Furman's loss to Western Carolina, Marshall moves into a second place conference tie with Western Carolina.

Marshall's championship chances depend on winning against University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, Western Carolina and conference leader Appalachian State with the Apps losing at least one remaining conference game in addition to Marshall. Along with playing the Herd at Fairfield Stadium Nov. 8, Appalachian State's remaining conference games are with Furman and Virginia Military.

Marshall has never beaten UTC and Western Carolina, and Appalachian State is one of the premier teams in the conference.

The Herd rode Tony Petersen's arm and Mike Barber's hands to a win over Eastern Tennessee. Petersen threw for 394 yards and completed 21 of 39 passes and two touchdowns, including an 80-yard touchdown bomb to Mike Barber on the second play of the game. Barber finished with 116 yards on four receptions.

Defensively, the Herd played its normal knock-down, drag-out game in the first half and once again came up with the big play to stop a final drive that could have won the game.

On the East Tennessee Buccaneers' last possession and the score 24-17, quarterback Jeff Morgan completed a sideline pass to wide receiver Sam Brown. Brown broke into the open for what would have been a 43-yard gain to the Herd's 28. However, Marshall linebacker John Spellacy forced a fumble for the second time in the game, when he stripped the ball from Brown's hands. Darryl Burgess recovered the fumble with 1:30 left in the game.

In spite of spending most of the first half in the Buccaneers' side of the field, Marshall had just 17 points at intermission. The Herd failed to score from the ETSU 25, 18 and 24 during the half. The Buccaneers failed to cross mid-field and went scoreless.

The second half looked like a different ball game. On the first possession of the half, ETSU drove 73 yards on 16 plays for a touchdown.

Marshall answered with an 80-yard touchdown drive on nine plays, which peaked in a one-yard run by running back Jerry Harris.

The Buccaneers scored two more third-quarter touchdowns with drives of 52 yards in nine plays and 51 yards in 8 plays.

With 17 seconds left in the game, a Buccaneer roughed the kicker giving Marshall an automatic first down.

On the next play, tailback Terry Parks carried the ball 53 yards for a score as the time ran out. Parks pulled a hamstring muscle on the run and limped ten yards before diving from the five into the end zone.

Cross country team takes second place

By Doug Smock
Reporter

The men's cross country team took second place Saturday in the University of Virginia Invitational, the final tune-up before the Southern Conference Championship.

The women's team finished 10th out of 15 teams, but cross country Coach Dennis Brachna said that is very deceptive because two personal records were shattered.

Dave Tabor finished fourth on the 8,000 meter course, just nine seconds behind East Tennessee State's Tom O'Gara. "He has the confidence," Brachna said. "I would say Dave has a legitimate shot at the conference individual title. O'Gara is by no means unbeatable."

Todd Crosson came in 10th at 25:10. Following Crosson for the Herd were Gary Cheslock, 15th, 25:22; David Marks, 24th, 25:37; and Dan Rechner, 25th, 25:38. Cheslock and Charlie Ward turned in personal records for 8,000 meters.

Steve Taylor led Virginia Tech to the team title, topping the field with a time of 23:55. The Virginia Tech Hokies had 24 points to Marshall's 60. Following the Herd were Virginia with 131, William and Mary with 135, and Old Dominion with 141. Southern Conference contender Virginia Military finished seventh with 184. East Tennessee State had two runners who failed to qualify for a team score.

For the women's team, Tina Maynard broke 19 minutes for 5,000 meters for the first time in her career, finishing 29th at 18:45. Lisa Hindson also set a personal best with a 19:14 clocking, good for 44th place. Kathy Bunn set a personal record at 20:27, finishing 92nd.

Shelly Wallace, 77th, 20:01; Ingrid Mason, 80th, 20:05; and Sue Kepich, 86th, 20:19, were the other Thundering Herd finishers.

Virginia, led by Patty Matava, won the women's division, followed by Virginia Tech. Maryland was third, followed by West Virginia, George Mason, Georgia Tech, Liberty, William and Mary, James Madison and Marshall.

The West Virginia men's team did not participate in the Virginia meet. Brachna said they decided to go to invitational at the University of Wisconsin, the defending national champion.

Brachna said, "This proved we are for real. The grass was about four inches high, the footing was unstable and it was quite treacherous and hilly." Brachna added that the runners felt the Virginia course was the toughest they have raced on this year.

Both teams will travel Nov. 1 to Chattanooga, Tenn. for the Southern Conference Championship.

Spikers second place finish puts team on track, coach says

Back on the winning track is how volleyball head coach Martha Newberry described the Lady Spikers, following the team's second place finish in the Alderson-Broadus Invitational tournament this weekend in Philippi.

Marshall advanced to the finals by twice defeating Mars Hill of North Carolina; Rio Grand; Fairmont and West Liberty.

The Lady Spikers were defeated in the championship match 6-15 and 9-15.

Newberry said the tournament was nonetheless a good experience for the team. "We felt (as if) we had been in a slump. We were trying so hard to win and were coming so close every time. It felt good to be able to win."

Newberry praised the performances of Melissa Hill, Chesapeake, W.Va., junior; Cheryl Beverage, New Martinsville junior; and Diane Allman, Vienna freshman.

Last week, Marshall lost to Ohio University 15-10, 15-9, 15-12. But the team bounced back Thursday, winning two of three games against Capital University in Columbus.

Starter Cindy Bryant, Huntington sophomore, is out with an upper respiratory infection and Newberry said she is unsure when the 6-foot hitter will return.

Nurses hope 'male' title will disappear in future

By Jeff Leaming
Reporter

Robert Lord and Ralph Vickers love the nursing profession, but hate to be called male nurses.

Lord, who is president of the student nurses association, is in his second year and Vickers his first of the associate degree program in the School of Nursing.

Vickers, who has worked at St. Mary's Hospital as an orderly for five years, says one should not enter the nursing profession for money.

"You really have to love this field, and that is why I'm in it. It is a great feeling to watch a patient that you're helping take care of progress," Vickers said. "I really love the field of nursing. I'm going to complete my associate degree, and then possibly go for a four-year degree. We are the patient advocate."

Both students said they hope the title "male nurse" will be shelved someday.

"Male nurse is kind of a sexist term. I don't know if the term will disappear.

Maybe it will when more males get into nursing," Vickers said.

Ten years ago only about 2 percent of all nurses were male, now the figure is up to about 6 percent, according to Lord.

Both men said they understand why the term exists. They said nursing, a female-dominated field, has always been associated with mothering and nurturing. They said they think the term "male nurses" will no longer exist in years to come.

"Physicians that are female are called 'female doctors,' just like we are called 'male nurses.' Because more men are studying nursing and more females are becoming physicians, I think these terms will disappear someday," Lord said.

However, there are some problems in the clinical field. According to Lord, women patients who are being treated during pregnancy do not like males caring for them. "We honestly care for patients and would not want to harm them or make them feel uncomfortable in any way."
