$28.2 million donation drive launched at dinner

By Lisa R. Graley
Reporter

Marshall is launching a $28.2 million fund drive to finance needed improvements the state cannot afford, said President Dale F. Nitzschke.

Nitzschke announced the drive Saturday at the 50th Annual Alumni Banquet.

Dr. Keith L. Scott, vice president for institutional advancement, said the campaign goal was decided after lists of needs were put together.

Awards also were handed out at the banquet.

Motion picture producer John C. Fiedler received the Distinguished Alumnus Award. Banking executive Richard D. Jackson was awarded the Community Achievement Award. Also, Sam E. Clagg, Sesquicentennial Committee chairman and retired chairman of the Department of Geography, was honored with the Distinguished Service Award.

Huntington native named to head CERI program

A Huntington native with 16 years of education and development experience has been named to head the Board of Regent's Center for Education and Research for Industry located at Marshall.

William A. Edwards has been named to head the center established in 1983 by the BOR to promote relationships between colleges, universities and the state's business community, according to Dr. Robert F. Maddox, associate vice president for academic affairs and director of economic development programs.

Maddox said Edwards, a former assistant to the president of Parkersburg Community College, will be an asset to the center because of his 16 years of administrative experience and 14 years of grants and business development experience.

Edwards also served as president of the West Virginia Adult Education Association and coordinator of services to business for the West Virginia Department of Education's Bureau of Vocational, Technical and Adult Education.

Protesters stage rally at Capitol

Messages left on Moore's lawn

By John Himelrick
Reporter

Protesters left their mark Sunday on the Governor's Mansion, leaving signs on the lawn and a huge "Keep your promise to higher education" banner on the porch.

Approximately 200 people met on the Capitol steps to protest budget cuts affecting higher education in West Virginia.

THE BUDGET CRUNCH

Faculty members from state colleges and universities organized the rally and spoke in defense of higher education arguing further budget cuts in education would not only hurt the state now, but also will have serious repercussions on the economy.

Student Body President Brendan Leary was the rally's only student speaker. He gave a Marshall Student Senate resolution to House Speaker Chuck Chambers, D-Cabell, who was observing the rally. The resolution called on leaders of this "depression-ridden state" to find alternative funding or alternative cuts.

From the Capitol, the protesters marched to the Governor's Mansion where one man knocked on the front door hoping Gov. Arch A. Moore would come out. After receiving no response from the governor, protesters hung their signs on plants, shrubbery, windows and the front door.

Delays plague fine arts facility; should start this summer, dean says

By Catherine Liddle
Reporter

After several delays, phase I of the Marshall's proposed fine arts complex is scheduled to begin construction this summer, according to the dean of the College of Fine Arts.

Dr. Paul A. Balshaw said delays such as getting contract approvals and selling all the necessary bonds have plagued the proposed complex.

Phase I, part of four phases designed by the architectural firm Abramovitz, Kingsland and Schiff, is scheduled to be completed in May 1989, he said.

This first phase will cost $13.5 million and will house a playhouse and studio. This phase also will include technical areas, a workshop for set building, a costume construction area and a rehearsal room.

Phase II will be a wing behind Phase I. It will cost an estimated $12.5 million and will include faculty offices, classrooms for theater and dance and a concert hall.

Phase III will cost approximately $11.3 million and will contain a visual art department with studio, gallery and academic areas.

Phase IV will house the Department of Music including a recital hall and library. Estimated costs for this Phase have yet to be determined. The university soon will campaigning to raise $1 million to complete the $13.5 million funding package, Balshaw said.

Unemployed testify at hearing claim too much paperwork hurts

CHARLESTON —

West Virginians who lost their jobs because of imports testified at a congressional hearing Monday that federal programs designed to help them are bogged in paperwork.

They said retraining schools last two years, for instance, but benefits used to pay for them last just 18 months.

Gary Marion, who lost his job at the Volkswagen stamping plant in South Charleston, said the unspoken message he receives from state Department of Employment Security workers is that he'll never find a job in this state that pays as well as VW.

"The feeling I get is, 'Hey, why don't you just pack up and leave West Virginia,'" Marion said during the hearing at the University of Charleston.

But state Employment Security Commissioner Adna Thomas denied the allegations.

"I don't see that there's any basis for it," Thomas said. "Those comments come out of frustration."

The frustration, Thomas said, stems from a lack of funding for the Trade Readjustment Act, a federal program the state administers. The program ran out of money for most of its functions on Jan. 20 — less than four months into its budget year. Thomas said Congress authorized just $29.9 million for Trade Readjustment Act programs nationwide this year — $750,000 of it in West Virginia.

Rep. Bob Wise, D-W.Va., said he called the hearing, attended by about 150 people, to air problems with the Trade Readjustment Act, the Training Adjustment Assistance program and the Jobs Training Partnership Act. Transcripts from Monday's hearing will be forwarded to the House Education and Labor Committee, of which Wise is a member.

Fred Williams, a laid-off miner from a USX Corp. mine, said Employment Security personnel show no compassion and provide little information.

"They act like they're talking to a derelict or something," Williams said.

Protestors disrupt traffic, block gates to CIA HQ

WASHINGTON —

More than 450 protesters, many chanting the slogan "the whole world is watching," were arrested Monday as they sat down in front of entrances to CIA headquarters during the morning rush hour.

The non-violent protest was a major event in three days of demonstrations against Reagan administration policies in Central America and Southern Africa.

U.S. Park Police, with jurisdiction over the north gate of the facility in nearby Langley, Va., arrested 175 people. Fairfax County, Va., police, with jurisdiction over the south gate, arrested 287.

Of the latter, 72 were taken to jail because they refused to identify themselves or for some other reason.

The demonstrators succeeded in closing the main gate to the spy agency headquarters for at least four hours.

Among those arrested were antiwar activists Daniel Ellsberg and Philip Berrigan. Another protester was John Stockwell, former CIA official involved in Angola operations, who subsequently turned against the CIA.

"This building is filled with people who know what they're doing is wrong," said Ellsberg, who was detained only briefly and returned to the main gate. He praised police officers for being efficient and polite.

"We're releasing some on summons, but a lot are refusing to give their identities so we're having to detain them," said Dave Mulvey, a spokesman for the county police department.

Mrs. Betty Rademaker, a 73-year old grandmother of three from Salem, Ore., was arrested and said she expects to be sentenced to anywhere from a week to a month for her role in the protest.

Asked why she joined the demonstration, Mrs. Rademaker said, "I guess I've tried everything else. I really tried through the legal channels and the electoral process and it seems to me the situation has become so desperate that we just have to put our bodies on the line."

College students protest raids by South African army

JOHANNESBURG —

Police used whips and fired tear gas and birdshot Monday in running battles with hundreds of students — both blacks and whites — at an anti-government protest at the University of Cape Town, officials said.

Some students were arrested, the government-controlled South African Broadcasting Corp. reported. It was one of the most violent campus disturbances since a nationwide state of emergency was declared in June 1986.

Reporters at the scene said about 100 police were involved in the clashes, during which students erected and set fire to a barricade at the university's main entrance and later barricaded themselves in the student union.

The melee broke out at the multi-racial university after anti-apartheid student organizations held a midday rally to protest a South African army commando raid in Zambia on Saturday. After the rally, students marched around the campus, at the foot of Cape Town's Table Mountain.

The government's Bureau for Information said police fired tear gas and used whips on students after police and private vehicles were stoned. It said officers fired birdshot when they feared the tear gas would spread from the campus to a highway.

Manila based U.S. HQ attacked, two grenades exploded; no injuries

MANILA, Philippines — Unidentified men hurled grenades Monday at the headquarters of U.S. military advisers in suburban Manila, a security officer said. There were no reports of injuries.

Airman First Class Lucerio Manaay said windows shattered when two grenades blew up outside the supply room and the headquarters of the Joint U.S. Military Assistance Group in Quezon City.

Manaay said a third grenade was thrown at the guard post but failed to explode. He said officers were out of the building when the explosions occurred at 7 p.m.

MU's brown nose

If you thought we at The Parthenon were the only ones who smelled something rotten about Gov. Arch Moore becoming an honorary alumnus of this university, listen to this.

Last Friday's Daily Athenaeum, the student newspaper of West Virginia University, carried an editorial called "Marshall sucks up." The Daily Athenaeum said that Marshall has nothing to thank Arch Moore for, but that the award ceremony was a dandy opportunity to give the governor a drink, thank him for his budget cut and ask, "Can you spare a dime, Governor Moore?"

The Athenaeum is right. The university was sucking up. We hope officials had handkerchiefs handy to clean off their noses after the ceremony was over.

The WVU paper suggests its university honor Moore in a similar fashion, by making him an honorary WVU student for a day, thus subjecting him to the daily indignities that students at that university are heir to.

After parking his car in an underground garage with all the structural integrity of our own Fairfield Stadium, twisting his ankle on broken tiles at WVU's plaza and attending overcrowded classes, Moore would go home and "declare a year of education that would have 12 months and real benefits," The Athenaeum said.

We'll not only see their suggestion, we'll raise it. How 'bout making Moore a Marshall professor for a year.

The catch? He'll have to live on the salary.

The big sleep

It was the type of thing it is easy to make jokes about. A group of social workers, ministers, Marshall students and a sprinkling of politicians slept out on the lawn of the Cabell County Courthouse Friday night to better understand the plight of the homeless.

"Yeah, sure. They'll spend one warm spring night outside, get up in the morning and drive home in their Volvos," one might think. "That's really understanding the homeless."

Well, it didn't turn out quite that way. The 60 or so people who gathered at the Huntington City Mission prior to the sleep out didn't get off quite that easy. The temperature got down into the 40s. There were winds of 5 to 15 mph. It drizzled most of the night.

An experienced outdoorsman, properly equipped, can make himself reasonably comfortable in almost any weather. But instead of bedding down with ground pads, expensive sleeping bags, tents or tarps, most of the people made camp in the manner of the homeless. They slept on cardboard, kept warm with soggy newspapers and kept the rain off as best they could with plastic garbage bags.

Most of them passed a perfectly miserable night.

How much more meaningful it is when people are willing to undergo considerable discomfort to emphasize the plight of the least of our society.

True, they could get up early Saturday morning, drive home and get a shower and fresh change of clothes. Most of us have that luxury.

But those who voluntarily spent a night as the homeless do deserve our praise. After one night of discomfort they can, even if just a little bit, understand what it means to be without a roof over your head.

Weekend's turn of events likely to turn a few stomachs as well

If you get the feeling that while you're out thrashing the grapes, your bosses are inside the farmhouse drinking the wine, then you've been perusing the weekend's news.

So many ironies abounded in the past few days, it could be likened to a Monty Python production. In case you missed it, here's a brief rendition of what went on, with some commentary.

First, the Capitol rally in Charleston. About 250 people attended the event Sunday to protest the lack of support for the Year of Education.

The protesters made their way to the governor's lawn where, after unsuccessful attempts to reach him in his mansion, they left notes saying "Keep your promise to higher education."

They get an A for effort. But I'm skeptical that it will get results. The governor and the Legislature are in a battle of namecalling and higher education has, as usual, gotten caught in the middle. It happens every year.

At the same time, the Legislature was reconvening long enough to say an opening prayer, recite the pledge of allegiance, debate on whether they should do absolutely nothing and then adjourn.

If it costs $300 a minute of taxpayer money to support the Legislature's fiascos, er, sessions, then its little coup Sunday cost about $27,000 — about the same as some full professors on this campus make annually.

It gets even better.

For while higher education is bled dry and Marshall, in particular, runs low on morale and money, the governor accepts an honorary degree from our alumni association Friday. Arch proclaims himself a "gung-ho" fan of Marshall and the alumni association calls him a "very special person" who's done much to help the university. Guess we're running short of very special people.

Arch says he has a hard time explaining why he loves the university so much. That's certainly understandable. No one else can explain it, either. In fact, most people probably were scratching their head at the comment.

Across town, Del. Rick Houvouras, D-Cabell, blasts the governor in a speech to the social work program's Board of Visitors, saying everything wrong in this state is the chief executive's fault. Of course, the Legislature couldn't have had a hand in it. Why, legislators did everything humanly possible to get funding for higher education — including keeping up or passing new taxes as well as devising creative methods to provide the necessary revenue. They didn't let personal politics and vendettas with Moore get in the way. Did they?

Also on Friday, Dr. Pat Robertson tells Cabell County Republicans that, although we've had some tough economic times, we're "going to make it." Of course, if Dr. Robertson gets his way, people from Appalachia will be "making it" by living off disabled veterans' benefits after they've fought off all those dirty commies of the world. Keeping in mind the Vietnam War — which was in large part fought by the poor and uneducated from Appalachia — who do you figure will be the first to go to Nicaragua?

And speaking of world affairs, members of MAPS-UCAM joined a nationally organized protest in Washington this weekend as part of a national coalition to protest American involvement in South Africa and Central America.

Sure, it's a worthy cause. But sometimes I wonder if we're trying to rebuild the neighbor's house while our own is caving in.

Last year at this time I might have been applauding such efforts. But cynicism comes with watching West Virginia politics.

Anyway, this is only intended to ensure you that if you got nauseated Monday morning while reading the morning newspaper, it probably wasn't because the milk in your oatmeal was sour.

Robertson at Radisson

Robertson

Education deserves a poor grade, Pat Robertson said while in Huntington. But the possible presidential candidate said the scandalous behavior of some evangelists won't make him fail in his attempt to be president.

By Thomas A. Taylor
Reporter

Federal higher education funds are being wasted according to possible presidential candidate, the Rev. Pat Robertson.

Friday at the Radisson Hotel, Robertson said the Department of Education never should have been created and now should be abolished. "I think the federal government spends about $18 or $19 billion on education and it is being wasted."

Robertson — who indicated in October he would run for president if he received three million signatures from supporters and $6 million in campaign money — spoke to about 450 people at the Lincoln Day dinner, a fundraiser sponsored by the Cabell County Republican Executive Committee.

He said the recent scandal associated with Jim Bakker and other television evangelists shouldn't hurt his chances at the presidency. Robertson called himself a businessman and family programmer.

Students are being taught the wrong things, Robertson said. "Schools in many states have become giant social science laboratories to manipulate the minds of the kids."

Robertson said some children were told during a value clarification lesson that if stranded on a lifeboat with their parents and no food, to survive they should kill and then eat a parent.

"Can you imagine teaching anything like that to children in schools?" Robertson said. "Can you imagine indoctrinating someone with cannibalism? And can you imagine textbooks on so-called value-free sex education that teach homosexuality and lesbianism as acceptable lifestyles?"

Robertson called for three corrections to be made in education. First, schools must begin teaching a "broad-based system of phonics," he said. The "look-say" method of reading now widely used is partially responsible for the high illiteracy rate, he said.

Secondly, he said students need to be taught basics such as math, history, science and geography "so that they can learn what is going on. With the high-tech skills needed in our world, there is no way our young people are going to compete if they can't read and write."

Thirdly, Robertson said some kind of moral discipline must be re-established in the schools. "Children, once again, have got to be allowed to pray in schools of America," he said. Robertson said schools and universities are failing to produce efficient students. "No business could just put out inefficient products that nobody wanted the way they (schools) have, but the reason that is true is because there is always federal money to pay the bill."

Robertson, who is founder and chancellor of CBN University, said tuition costs are too high and universities should look for funding outside the government.

Robertson's press secretary said Robertson plans to announce his candidacy in September if he gets the necessary signatures and funds.

MAPS-UCAM protests in D.C. against American policies

By Kimberly Mitchell
Reporter

More than 100 people from the Huntington area, including 12 MAPS/UCAM members, traveled to the nation's capital this weekend to protest the United States' foreign policies in Central America and South Africa.

Members of the National Hospital Workers Union Local 1199 based in Huntington also attended. The groups participated in what are being called the biggest protests since Vietnam, according to MAPS/UCAM president Joe Eckhart.

The crowd estimate in Washington was 150,000, according to the police department. About 25,000 participated in San Francisco for protestors on the West Coast.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson was the key speaker for the event. Actor Ed Asner and the 1960s singing trio, Peter, Paul and Mary also were at the rally.

"It was a rock concert atmosphere without the drugs and alcohol," Ben W. Petrey, Huntington senior, said.

YEAGER NEWS

Medallions to symbolize nature of Yeager scholars

By Bill France
Reporter

Something special.

That's how Dr. William N. Denman, director of the Society of Yeager Scholars described the silver-plated medallions to be presented to the Yeager scholars when they graduate.

"We came up with the idea of medallions after examining all the symbolism that goes along with a program like this. It will say these young men and women are made of sterner stuff, just like K-MONEL," said President Dale F. Nitzschke.

When the original announcement of the Yeager scholars program was made in Feb. 1986, the medallions were to be made totally of K-MONEL, one of the hardest and most durable metals known.

The metal is a product of Huntington Alloys Inc. It was used in the frames of several of the airplanes in the Bell experimental aircraft series. There is no official documentation that the craft Yeager broke the sound barrier in contained the alloy but according to Matt Redling, Huntington Alloys spokesman, there is a good chance K-MONEL was used. The metal was used in other Bell experimental aircraft.

"We wanted the metal because of its association with Yeager and Huntington," Denman said. "We're trying to establish a symbol of student accomplishment and tradition. It will become part of the history of the university and the culture of the organization."

The society told Huntington Alloys Inc. they would like for them to make the medals, Redling said. "We told them that we would supply the metal, but didn't think it would work. K-MONEL, now called MONEL-Alloy K-500 is a very tough material. Coinage is usually very soft."

"The first set of medals were struck by Medallion Art Co. of Danbury, Conn., which is the best company in their field," Redling said. "If they can't get the job done, then no one can."

Medallion Art Inc., who strikes the medals for the Pulitzer Prize and for the past 11 presidential inaugurations, thought of possibly casting molten K-MONEL to make the medallions. Unfortunately, the company was unable to get the detail that was desired.

Finally, the solution was to use bronze as the primary metal and to coat it with a fine dust of K-MONEL flakes. After the medals had been hammered out they were plated with silver.

Memorabilia on shelves; wrong time for right stuff

By Bill France
Reporter

The stuff is here, but its just not right yet.

University students and visitors may have to wait a while before they get a chance to see the collection of personal papers and memorabilia donated to Marshall in March by national aviation hero Charles E. "Chuck" Yeager.

Dr. William N. Denman, director of the Society of Yeager Scholars, said when he went to the library to see the collection it was still shelved. The items were shipped to Marshall in February, before Yeager made the official announcement of the donation March 18 at The Radisson Hotel in Huntington.

The items are currently being appraised for insurance purposes, according to President Dale F. Nitzschke. The current value of the collection is $500,000. Yeager's memorabilia will be made available for viewing by students when all items have been tagged and catalogued. The display will then be opened to the general public. "We hope to get it all down during the summer months, Nitzschke said. "By the time the students return in the fall the display should be ready."

Part of the Yeager collection will be displayed at The First Huntington National Bank in early June. Denman said this was set up as sort of a promotional tool.

Another part of the collection will be displayed in the new Yeager suite, which is under construction in Old Main, according to Denman. "Whether that is the best place to put it or not, is the question. It should be displayed some place that is secure and people can get to it easily. It really ought to be some place in the library, where people have access to it."

Lisle G. Brown, library curator, said the collection was never intended to be placed in the library. "The only place available that has public viewing would be the display case on second floor by the lounge area. The Yeager suite in Old Main is the logical place to put it," Brown said.

Nitzschke said next year the collection would be displayed in the Yeager suite, but eventually the entire collection will be made available to everyone at the library. "Another floor is going to be added to the library. This floor will house the Yeager collection, the new Confederate collection, as well as others."

The collection may grow as time goes on, Denman said. "As Yeager accumulates more things, he might be inclined to give them to us. For example, he's forever receiving awards."

Denman said the Yeager program recently received another addition to the collection when one of Yeager's daughters sent Marshall a video copy of his appearance on "This is Your Life."

Rain doesn't soak Springfest

Partiers do it in the mud

Mudfest.

That's what many students called the annual Springfest concert because of the wet conditions. A cold, drizzling rain fell throughout the day, but did not dampen the spirits of the dedicated partiers.

"It was wet, but it was fun," said Chrystalle L. Crabtree, Wheeling sophomore, who sold tickets at the gate. Attendance was down from previous years, but the late-arriving crowd seemed to enjoy themselves.

Rebecca Cliness, Youngstown, Ohio, freshman, was covered from head to toe with mud. "I had the best time of my life, and I would do it all over again," Cliness said as she was trying to get the caked-on dirt off of her once yellow sweatshirt. "I was so dirty I had to walk home because no one wanted me in their car."

No alcohol was allowed to be brought inside the gate, but that didn't keep students from finding creative ways to sneak bottles by security guards. One group injected a cooler-full of oranges with grain alcohol. Another brought in a bottle in a potato chip bag. An even more adventurous group buried a bottle in the park the night before.

Those who got caught suffered no punishment besides the confiscation of their bottles. According to Crabtree, security guards only took the liquor they found and let the owners go on in.

Jamie Sexton, Ripley junior, and student coordinator of Springfest Jonathan Green, St. Albans junior, gave the crowd a little entertainment before the concert started. The two danced and jumped around for the enthusiastic crowd, concluding their routine by stripping down to "jams" and Hard Rock Cafe t-shirts.

The featured band from California, The Long Ryders, began the show and were followed by a local group, The Debut. The concert had been tabbed "Rockin' Reggae," but no reggae sounds were heard. The scheduled reggae band, Irie, did not play.

Above: The Long Ryders' lead singer and guitarist Sid Griffin gets into his act. The featured California band opened the festivities, playing tunes from a recently released album. Above, right: Three thirsty participants in the beer-chugging contest try to pour most of the beer down their throats and not their shirts. Near right: Security guards from the Huntington Police Department watched the party closely. Far right: Contests on stage during intermissions kept the crowd entertained.

After Saturday's Green-White scrimmage, Coach George Chaump said two facets of the Herd's game needing improvement are its offensive line and second units. Anyone who watched the 56-3 rout by the first-team Green would say those statements go hand in hand — the second-unit offensive line needs improvement.

The White's offensive linemen practically got running backs Mike Beasley and B.D. Nunnery and quarterbacks John Gregory and Steve Supsura killed. Beasley had to tiptoe around the field all day, while Gregory faced almost constant pressure from the Green defense in the first half. For the White, he completed 13 of 31 for 116 yards with two interceptions; in the safer Green environment in the second half, the southpaw connected on 10 of 13 for 135 yards, including a touchdown.

He said the White linemen's inexperience showed. "But the Green just had a little more experience. Some of the players for the White will be good, too. They just need some time."

Gregory said he isn't going to be preoccupied with whether he or Tony Petersen starts at quarterback this fall.

"I'm going to play a lot of golf," he joked. "No, I thought a lot about it (starting) during the first of the spring, but I realized there's nothing I can do about it but go out and do my best."

Things went the Green's way from the first crack out of the box as Rondell Wannamaker intercepted Gregory's second pass of the day and returned it 21 yards to the White 16. On the next play Green quarterback Petersen, who played the first half and completed eight of 16 for 152 yards and two scores, got one of them when he drilled a pass to Mike Barber.

Tailback Ron Darby got his first of five touchdowns at 10:49 of the second quarter to cap a five-play, 43-yard drive.

"I'm pretty happy, I guess," Darby said afterward. "We weren't running very much at first, just passing."

The White got its only points when Steve Fischer, who just finished his Marshall soccer career, kicked a 34-yard field goal with 6:18 left.

Keith Baxter scored the other touchdown for the Green on a 20-yard look-in pass from Gregory.

Jerome Hazzard, who was moved from strong safety to fullback earlier in the spring, rushed eight times for 44 yards, but said he is still awkward at the new position.

Tracksters finish third at conference

Best performance ever — Brachna

By Doug Smock
Sports Editor

Despite the fact Appalachian State dominated the Southern Conference track championships, Coach Dennis Brachna called the weekend the best in the history of Marshall track and field.

"Everybody came through," Brachna said. "The weather conditions were terrible. It was 46 degrees and raining each day. But they didn't let it bother them."

The Herd, led by winning performances by Todd Crosson, Dave Marks, Lynn Cotton and Michelle Withers, finished third in both men's and women's competitions Friday and Saturday at Appalachian's Conrad Stadium in Boone, N.C.

The Thundering Herd men scored 106 points, falling short of second-place Virginia Military's 118 1/2. Appalachian had 193.

Meanwhile, the Lady Apps really dominated, scoring 271 1/2 points. Second-place East Tennessee State scored less than half that, 133 1/2, while Marshall had 112.

Cotton heaved the discus a conference record 122 feet, 10 inches, while Withers shattered the school record in the shot put at 41-9 3/4. Withers had bettered 41 feet indoors, but took a while to reach that outdoors.

Bobbi Hanning teamed with Cotton to form a Marshall bloc in the discus, taking second with a 119-10 toss.

Erica West had a big day, finishing second in the long jump at 18-33/4 and third in the 100-meter dash at 12.77 seconds.

Abercrombie, Meg Hanshaw, Staci Morgan and West toppled the school record of 49.2 in the 400-meter relay, finishing second at 49.04.

On the men's side, Crosson — to the surprise of probably no one — won Friday's 3,000-meter steeplechase easily, running a 9:10.30 to break the Appalachian track record.

While Crosson dominated the steeplechase, Marks' victory in the 1,500-meter run was, according to Brachna, the product of an intelligent race.

Dave Tabor took second in the 10,000-meter (30:45.88), while Rob Mitchell was the runner-up in the 800 at 1:53.98.

Craig Burd surprised Brachna in the 400-meter hurdles, taking second. His 53.70 time was over a full second faster than his previous best.

Another pleasant surprise was the 400-meter relay team of Tim Haley, Butch Jones, Brian Swisher and Chris Gerber, who placed third (41.96), the highest Marshall finish ever in that event.

Sports Briefs

Golf team seventh

The golf team, in the midst of the Kentucky-Johnny Owens Intercollegiate tournament, was in seventh place Monday going into the final round at the Griffin Gate Marriott Resort.

Kelly Maxwell shot a 76 Sunday and led Marshall at 151. Tom Kies was next at 152, followed by Pat Carter at 155, Todd Miller at 160 and Joe Vennari at 167.

Baseball finishing up

The Herd goes to Morehead State today and Rio Grande Wednesday as it finishes the 1987 season.

Friday's makeup game against Bluefield State was rained out, slimming Marshall's chances for an even season. The Herd is at 15-16.

Sense of pride — Phi Delt's chartered

Phi Delta Theta became a full-fledged fraternity as the colony received its charter this weekend in ceremonies at Otterbein United Methodist Church.

"We have been able to operate like any other fraternity," Martin Taylor, president of Phi Delta Theta said. "A charter to us means realization of a goal and gives us a sense of pride. We started a fraternity; we are not just members of some other fraternity," he said.

Friday night all local members became initiated into the national fraternity, and Saturday the chapter was installed.

"To receive the charter we had to complete nine prerequisites," Taylor said. Among those were raising $2,000 to pay for ritual equipment and the installation ceremony, achieving a grade point average ranking among the top three fraternities on campus, establishing alumni relations and establishing by-laws in accordance Phi Delt nationals.

"From the time our fraternity was established here until now our goal was to complete the prerequisites and become chartered," Taylor said. "We have set new goals now that we are chartered," he added. Those include establishing social service programs and raising funds to pay for insurance and buy the chapter a computer.

Of the 1937 flood, a student body election, etc.

The Alumni Association celebrated Marshall's Sesquicentennial last weekend with a number of activities and programs, including an awards banquet, a sesquicentennial ball, seminars, and a "celebrity reception."

Sporting green and gold ribbons, alumni members of Marshall's 50th-Year Class and "Grand Class" (pre-1937) were honored at a luncheon.

Elizabeth Trippy, 1114 12th Ave., a ribboned alumna, sat in the candlelit Suite A of the Huntington Civic Center at the Alumni Celebrity Reception. She was waiting for Gov. Arch A. Moore to become an honorary alumnus.

She talked about the 1937 flood and leaving Old Main at 3 a.m. in a boat which took her to Sixth Avenue. She said that as the boat went by the student union, one could touch the top of the sign.

Where is that sign now?

She remembers coming to Marshall in her last year of college and voting for a young man to become student body president because her roommate told her to do so. After she graduated, she met and married the same man. And yes, he was with her this night.

Not only did she and her husband graduate from the university, but her children did, also.

How many children?

But, Moore is speaking now. He is a new honorary member of the alumni. Trippy turns her attention to him.

She is still involved with the events that shape Marshall. She and her husband attend as many events as they can at the university.

Able to recall so many memories of events that happened long ago, Trippy is one of the many who bridge the gap between then and now.
