Chancellor takes work in Atlanta

Cole throws in towel; will stay for interim

By SUSAN K. LAMBERT
Reporter

The search is on for a new Board of Regents chancellor after the resignation of Dr. Thomas W. Cole.

Cole resigned to become president of Clark College in Atlanta, but will continue as chancellor until his replacement is found.

An accelerated search could produce a new chancellor by the end of 1987, the president of the BOR said. Louis J. Costanzo said he is optimistic.

"The search process is already under way," Costanzo said. "The board will advertise the position nationally and follow the same guidelines used previously."

Because Cole will stay in his position until a replacement can be selected, plans do not include appointing an interim chancellor, Costanzo said.

The board is moving toward finding a replacement as soon as possible.

Dr. W. Thomas McNeel

Costanzo would not comment on any possible candidates for the job but did say that all applications would receive a full review by each board member.

State Superintendent of Schools, Dr. W. Thomas McNeel, a member of the BOR, said the selection process would be done quickly.

"The board is moving toward finding a replacement as soon as possible," McNeel said.

One person who said he will not be a candidate for Cole's vacancy is President Dale F. Nitzschke.

Nitzschke said, "I came to West Virginia for one reason and one reason only and that was to be president of Marshall University."

Cole submitted his resignation to the BOR during a private executive meeting in Lewisburg last week.

Reasons vary for migration of grads

By ABBEY DUNLAP
Staff Editor

Greener pastures are drawing record numbers of recent college graduates away from West Virginia.

The reasons for this migration of many of the state's highly educated residents are as varied as the long-term effects these excursions will have on the state, members of the university community say.

M. Lynn Cregger, Van sophomore and legal assistant major, said, "There's more opportunities out of state. I like West Virginia and everything, but it doesn't have a lot to offer."

Bobbi Cart, Hurricane freshman and business education major, said, "I'll probably leave the state because of the low pay for teachers in West Virginia."

Not only does the lack of jobs play a part in decisions to leave, but low pay also figures prominently.

Outward migration is a natural economic process, according to Dr. Roger L. Adkins, chairman of the Department of Economics.

"Migration is a way to correct the economic problems we have," Adkins said. He, along with Dr. Ramchandra G. Akkihal, professor of economics, compiled a study, "Out-Migration and Economic Growth in West Virginia," during the summer of 1986.

The key to keeping college graduates in this state is to provide job opportunities.

"If you want to make the state grow, the idea may not be to invest in every county equally," he said.

To do this, areas of potential growth — the Eastern Panhandle, the Charleston-Huntington-Parkersburg triangle and the Beckley region — should be where the state's financial expenditures are focused.

This solution would be the most rational economic way to solve this problem, but Adkins said he realizes political problems may arise which make this solution less than desirable.

However, politically, this strategy would be difficult to carry out as every politician representing counties not in potential growth areas also would be fighting for money, he said.

"This strategy may help us retain more people if followed."

Drew Green, Scott Depot sophomore and chemistry/pre-med major, said he is leaving because he doesn't like West Virginia

Cole's resignation

Once again, the new academic calendar begins with a shake-up at the Board of Regents.

Last year at this time, interim-chancellor Thomas Cole was selected to take over the position full-time, even though he had not applied for the job and had said he did not want it.

Now, he has resigned to accept a job at Clark College in Atlanta, Ga.

Cole released a statement saying his resignation was not because he was dissatisfied with the board, but rather because he wanted to better serve minorities at the prestigious black institution.

Although Cole was a competent, if not a dazzling leader, we have to wonder if his heart ever was truly in it.

Or, perhaps, he was driven to resign by the state government's making a total fiasco of the "Year of Education."

No doubt the chancellor's job is tough enough — without having to deal with power-playing legislators and the governor.

The shake-up certainly raises questions as to the BOR's stability, which is key considering it is up for reapproval this Legislative term.

If Moore again proposes a three-member commission of his cronies to replace the board, and with the Ginsberg report highly critical of it, the coming session promises to be messy.

The chances of the board's surviving it unscathed seem slim.

Could it be that Cole foresees the end coming for the BOR and is jumping ship now, before it gets ugly?

Leaving the state

It is sad and also alarming that many West Virginia college graduates feel compelled to leave the state as soon as they receive their diplomas.

Although part of this migration out of the state can be attributed to the normal economic process, it still is disturbing to learn many are leaving simply because they feel there is nothing here for them.

As today's college graduates are tomorrow's leaders, we have to wonder who will be around to run the state once the educatee, mobile crowd is gone. And, if the major tax base — said to be those between 20 to 30 years of age who are seeking a place to settle down and raise a family — is gone, how will the state support itself?

We also have to wonder what will be left to govern — considering the state lags behind in education, technology and public services.

We urge the Legislature this session to begin investing in the state's future by supporting public and higher education instead of continuing to adopt policies which literally drive people out.

Notable quote

"The most lavish buildings, highest salaries and largest enrollments cannot save a university that has lost its fundamental commitment — to truth."

Leon Ginsberg, former Board of Regents chancellor, in his 161-page report critical of the state's system of higher education governance.

Ginsberg report begs questions

At face value, it is easy to dismiss former Chancellor Leon Ginsberg's harsh criticisms of the Board of Regents as the rantings of a disgruntled ex-employee seeking revenge on the body that hired and fired him.

It is more painful to look at the system as Ginsberg portrayed it than to see the board as it claims to be.

Perhaps, that is why the Board of Regents, the governing body of higher education, failed to widely distribute the report — even though it hired Ginsberg to write it.

We don't deny that the report should be taken with a grain of salt, considering the source.

Ginsberg exposed the board warts and all. Naked — without the grandiose ideals of fairness and the pursuit of educational excellence shielding it, Ginsberg's BOR is a frighuening entity to behold.

Ginsberg's version of the board is that of an inept and inefficient body, easily controlled by some small college presidents who have no better to do than play power games.

These are troubling accusations that, at least, merit further inquiry.

If nothing else, there is evidence to support his contention that the 13-member board is not truly devoted to higher education if it means taking an stand contrary to the governor's. There is no disputing that the board is composed of community leaeers whose political views are similar to the governor's. Why else would the governor select them?

Indeed, the three regents interviewed by The Parthenon last year had no qualms in saying that the governor has every right to dictate to higher education because he is the chief-executive.

At least two of them, Sister Mary Jude-Jochum and John Shott, seemed to know or care little about the problems facing higher education. They had trouble answering even the most fundamental questions, such as whether the BOR would push the Legislature to give it some of the lottery money.

As Ginsberg pointed out, it seems even members do not know the board's mission. His 1986 firing on the same day the Legislature decided to allow the board to continue highlights that point. If the BOR's goal was to continue to courageously lead higher education, why was Ginsberg fired when he was credited as saving the board from the Legislative ax by raising its credibility?

It is speculated that the firing was a political trade-off. Governor Arch Moore wanted to replace the BOR with a three-member, goveroor-appointed commission. He met with college presidents and the regents the day the Legislature voted to keep the board alive for two more years. It seems likely that he agreed not to veto the Legislature's vote in return for Ginsberg's (a Rockefeller-appointee) job.

Politics obviously were involved. And such political maneuverings indicate that the Board can be and often is manipulated at the expense of a quality governing board.

Once again, the board will be up for reapproval in the coming Legislative term. We hope that issues raised by Ginsberg's report will not be dismissed without first being examined.

One obvious question is: how can the board be separated from the political arena and still do its job? Is it wise that the governor be able to appoint whomever he chooses, thereby making the board loyal to him and susceptible to his pressures? Is there a better system?

Another question that has never been answered is, if the Board of Regents is supposed to help higher education, why has the percentage of state funding gone from 18 percent in 1969 to 12 percent today?

These are but a few of the questions that demand answers. We hope that this time, the Legislature will go beyond political-swapping, and truly examine the merits of the board in its current structure before approving it.

On fulfilling that 'divine' obligation

And now for the real scoop on the Hart/Rice affair. Donna Rice happens to be my best friend's cousin, twice removed. And through several family connections, my friend came to find out what really went on during that fateful trip to Bimini.

Now that I've got your attention ...

This is the traditional first column each editor of The Parthenon believes to have a divine obligation to write. Each semester, each editor strives to find a new angle on his/her introductory column — something to entice readers to keep picking up the student newspaper, to explain what we're all about, etc.

Some editors exclaim "We've changed!" and go on to detail those minute graphical changes they have made, but which most readers don't consciously notice or care about. Others apologize ahead of time for mistakes that inevitably will appear from time to time in The Parthenon.

My predecessor made a worthy attempt in writing a "User's Guide" to The Parthenon. He tried to explain the various sections of the newspaper by for example, stressing that ads are to be placed with the advertising department, not the editor's office, as that mistake has driven deadline-ridden editors crazy. As managing editor last semester, I was the one destined to answer the editor's office phone and can assure you it did not work.

So, you see, everything has been tried.

I do not mean to insult this ritual. Actually, it is appropriate for each editor to "introduce" the student newspaper, considering that it invariably changes with each personality who assumes control of it. It also gives readers an idea of what they can expect from it, and between the lines, implies the overall tone of the newspaper.

And so, I will proceed accordingly.

As far as the editorial page is concerned, we will continue to be as outspoken and blunt (and, no doubt, as controversial) as ever. The Parthenon recently won two awards for editorial writing, competing against daily, professional newspapers in West Virginia. I point that out merely to emphasize that I believe if it ain't broke, don't fix it.

As in the past, our primary focus will be on the sad state of affairs of higher education in West Virginia, plus problems on campus and those decisions and policies at the campus level that have an impact on students, faculty and staff.

That is not to say that every editorial will be a mass spewing of editorial outcry. Neither does it mean that we will not tackle national issues. But we will be as biting as ever, when the situation calls for it. If the past antics of our state government are any indication, that is often.

We also hope to include more stories on student life. We now have an editor who will oversee coverage of older, returning and younger students and who will seek out stories about who we, as a student body, are at Marshall, what our tastes and interests are, and so forth.

Plus, we plan to publish a monthly survey that will probe a wide range of issues. Campus Angle, which offers a Marshall perspective on national and international issues, also will return each Thursday.

As always, we encourage letters-to-the-editor and guest commentaries. These should be signed and include class standing or academic title (that is, year in school for students, position for faculty and administrators), hometown and a phone number.

As with most editors of past years, I am writing this column ahead of publication time. It's safer that way. For we have yet to put together a first issue that doesn't involve some chaos.

Melissa
Huff

Last year at this time, a new Board of Regents chancellor was selected. This year, that same person has resigned. I knew something like this would happen. The only difference is this year, the announcement came one day before we got the newspaper ready to be printed.

The last minute scrambling around the newsroom these past few days brings back memories of last year, when the front and editorial pages had to be redesigned and fledging reporters were sent scampering out to gather quotes.

The announcement last fall also meant we lost our "big scoop." The scoop was that a long-time campus administrator had been selected as one of the finalists for the job (no one else knew he had applied).

But after some initial panic, we got the paper off to the presses in the waning hours of the night. Just when we thought all was well and were wearily bidding each other good night in the parking lot, former editor Burgetta Eplin Wheeler's car would not start.

I am hopeful things won't happen exactly that way this time (at least I want my car to start). But then again, we all might be a little disappointed and concerned about the omen of breaking tradition.

After all, I did write this introductory column. Oh, and by the way, I know no one even remotely related to Donna Rice (well, I had to get your attention now, didn't I?).

Yeager program launching: give it clear runway

In the fall of 1947, a young West Virginian pilot named Chuck Yeager was offered a chance. The result made history.

Now, 40 years later, Marshall University is on the brink of making history with its Society of Yeager Scholars program, named in honor of the aviation hero. It is equally important the university community gives this program a chance to fly.

For those unaware, the Society of Yeager Scholars is a highly-touted honors program in which 20 outstanding students study at Marshall, all expenses paid. The scholars go beyond the normal course requirements, participating in a rigorous language program, seminars and even a summer term at Oxford. Scholars receive spending money and have faculty mentors. The program has its own lounge and office in Old Main.

Some feelings of resentment toward the Society are understandable. Any program with millions in the bank — and a $272,000 suite as well — is bound to stir up ill-will when other departments are tightening their belts and students are finding financing their educations ever more difficult.

For example, professors and students in the College of Science who must share just two computers may question the university's priorities when they see the posh Yeager Suite.

They may see the suite as a deception, as something apart from the rest of the university which does not tell the true story of underfunded, poorly-equipped Marshall. However, the founders of the Society see the program as an investment in the future.

It must be remembered money lavished on the program is not cash out of other departments' pots. Any money spent on the Society is money raised specifically for that purpose and has nothing to do with the university's budget.

And, says President Dale F. Nitzschke, the entire campus will benefit from the Society — not just the Yeager Scholars. Once the program gets off the ground, so will the university which fosters it, he says.

Already, Marshall's name recognition has grown because of the Society, they say, and the dividends have only begun to pay off. For example, when Nitzschke was in the Middle East this summer, a Saudi Arabian diplomat wanted to know more about the program and how his country could become involved. We now have an exchange program with his country through the International Studies department.

Another example is the well-to-do Marshall graduate who contacted Nitzschke after hearing of the program. The two arranged for an endowed chair in the Department of Political Science. Thirdly, an important diplomat-in-residence is slated to come to campus this fall.

These examples indicate already there are other programs reaping benefits from the Yeager Scholars. But it is doubtful these opportunities would have come about without the publicity generated by the program.

Plus, we see no reason why other departments cannot use the program as a selling point in their own recruiting efforts.

Of course, criticizing the program is not reason for condemnation. In fact, constructive criticism can only improve it, and thus the university. Those in underfunded departments have every right to remind university officials of their problems. The university also has a responsibility to hear these opinions.

But at this point, keeping an open mind is important. Undue criticism of the program, its suite or its scholars isn't necessary; what is needed is a mixture of positive thinking and patience. With the students, faculty and staff sharing that attitude, the Society of Yeager Scholars program may find itself soaring to new heights...propelling the university upwards as well.

AIDS: Moral, ethical questions weighty

WASHINGTON — Surgeon General C. Everett Koop told President Reagan's AIDS commission Wednesday that the moral and ethical questions facing the nation in dealing with AIDS are at least as great as the scientific ones.

Availability of health care for AIDS patients, who will pay for it, confidentiality issues and public perception are among these basic questions, he said.

And Koop said the disease "is becoming a particular scourge of people who are young, black and Hispanic," noting that this comes at a time when the nation is emerging from decades of turmoil in trying to correct racial inequities of the past.

Koop also said he was becoming

The surgeon general said such social questions "are every bit as complex as the scientific questions."

Earlier, Otis R. Bowen, secretary of Health and Human Services, defended the government's reaction to AIDS since the disease emerged six years ago.

"Americans would have had to be on the moon, a desert island or in solitary confinement not to have heard about AIDS, how it is contracted and how to avoid it," said Bowen.

He outlined the steps government officials have taken since the first cases were reported in 1981, saying, "To criticize this effort is counterproductive and mean-spirited and tends to tarnish what is a solid record of accomplishment in modern medical science and health policy."

"I shall disregard any further criticism of what we have done, but I will listen to suggestions on what we can do in the future. And I will certainly heed the cries for help of the people with AIDS," he said.

Meanwhile, Dr. William Eugene Mayberry, the chairman of the commission Wednesday defended the administration's record on battling the deadly disease, saying the government has done an outstanding job.

Dismissal of Roark drug charges refused; charges termed vague

CHARLESTON — A federal judge on Wednesday refused to dismiss the 30-count indictment against Mayor Mike Roark and got into a heated argument with Roark's lawyer about what evidence he'll let the defense see before the trial.

U.S. District Judge Walter Hoffman agreed, however, with attorney Jim McIntyre that the indictment was vague.

Roark, 41, was indicted July 31 on 27 drug conspiracy, possession and distribution counts and three counts of conspiring to obstruct justice. Roark has pleaded innocent.

Justice slams Reagan's record on civil rights; spokesman differs

WASHINGTON — The White House Wednesday defended President Reagan's civil rights record and rejected sharp criticism from Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall.

In highly unusual public criticism, Marshall said Reagan ranked at "the bottom" of U.S. presidents in terms of racial justice.

Rejecting that notion, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "The president has an outstanding civil rights record (and) he has supported racial equality in six years of this administration. And I can't understand his (Marshall's) remarks, frankly."

The attacks surprised diplomats in the gulf, who had predicted Iraq would refrain from raids while Perez de Cuellar, secretary-general of the United Nations, visited the region in an effort to end the 7-year-old war.

College presidents labeled too political

Ginsberg: BOR should be abolished

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a two-part series in which former Board of Regents Chancellor Leon Ginsberg discusses the critical report he wrote about the board and his thoughts on the BOR's overall performance. Today he discusses powerful presidents and board politics.

By ABBEY DUNLAP
Staff Editor

West Virginia's Board of Regents is a spineless, politically-motivated entity controlled by a few presidents of small colleges who wield enough power to arbitrarily set the agenda for the state's higher education system, a former BOR chancellor said.

In a telephone interview Friday, Leon Ginsberg, now a social work professor at the University of South Carolina at Columbia, said he believes the board should be replaced with something better.

The Legislature will have to decide the fate of the board when the two-year stay of execution granted it in 1986 ends this legislative session. Although the board was not axed in 1986, Ginsberg was ousted the day the board was given another two years.

Some of the presidents spent more time trying to influence board members than I did. I had work to do. They didn't.

Some political observers have suggested Gov. Arch A. Moore, who led the 1986 battle to abolish the board, was behind Ginsberg's dismissal. In essence, observers have said Moore agreed to give the board another two years if it consented to firing Ginsberg.

However, Ginsberg said he isn't sure why he was fired or who was behind his leaving.

"I don't know," he said. "I think the governor was not happy with my work for a variety of reasons, but I also think he sees the need to abolish the BOR and replace it with something better."

"I certainly hope they abolish the board in 1988. That's my recommendation. Whether they take it or not, I can't predict."

Following his firing, Ginsberg was hired by the board to write an in-depth report. His mission was to dissect the board and recommend ways to make the system work better. His report, harshly critical of the state's higher education system, has yet to be widely distributed by the board.

One of Ginsberg's major criticisms of the state's higher education system centers on the power three or four long-term presidents of smaller colleges seem to wield over the entire system.

"Some of the four-year and community college presidents don't have anything to do so they spend a lot of time politicking some of the legislators so they seem to have power."

"Some of the presidents spent more time trying to influence board members than I did. I had work to do. They didn't."

Yet, the presidents of the state's two largest higher education institutions did not flex their political muscles, Ginsberg said.

"I thought the presidents of Marshall University and WVU were very timid around those other presidents," he said.

Ginsberg said merging institutions and cutting down the number of small college presidents by eliminating some of their jobs could end this higher education power struggle.

Not only are these presidents powerful, they also work against other constituencies as well, he said.

"For years, (these presidents) kept faculty from getting salary increases from student fees by telling the board it was immoral to pay for faculty salaries out of student fees."

Ginsberg said the board proposed a faculty pay increase in the spring of 1985 that would have been financed by an increase in students fee as the board this summer.

However, the board's 1985 proposal was thwarted by the powerful presidents who according to Ginsberg, "got on the phone and talked the regents out of it."

These same presidents, however, believed it was OK to use student fees to build new buildings, he said.

"Some presidents absolutely demanded that there be new facilities (on their campuses)."

The transformation of several vacant offices into a stylish and lavish suite, however, was not an easy task, Dr. William E. Denman, director of the Yeager Scholars, said.

Denman said initial planning for the Yeager program began in the summer of 1986, when he, President Dale F. Nitzschke and Joseph W. Hunnicutt, founder of the Yeager program, visited the Morehead-Scholars program at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"We got a lot of ideas from the Morehead program, especially for recruitment," Denman said.

The Yeager program differs from the Morehead Scholars in several ways, however, Denman said.

"We are more academic than the Morehead program," he said. "Morehead offers a free education, and a summer internship in the field of your choice, but there are no curricular requirements."

"We put the scholars through the Yeager core," Denman said. "We see the Yeager program as an academic program which offers a scholarship."

With the core curriculum firmly in place, university officials then began to focus their attention on developing a home for the Yeager program.

Denman said renovation began in February of 1987, only six months before the first class of Yeager Scholars was to enter Marshall.

The renovation was not a simple matter, according to Denman. "We took seven empty offices and literally gutted them," he said.

Work crews knocked out walls and cleared out the remains of old offices which Denman called "real charmers."

The next step was to furnish the suite. After receiving bids from four interior design companies, university officials selected West Virginia and Village Designs, Inc. with a bid of $169,561.

The furnishings were paid for by private donations, including a $150,000 grant from the Gannett Foundation, and Denman said the suite was well worth the price.

"The Yeager program is going to bring in many distinguished practitioners and lecturers who made their mark in their careers," he said. "We wanted a place where we could bring people, so they will take with them positive impressions of the university."

Yeager Scholars are not the only students who will use the suite, Denman said. It contains an office for a secretary and receptionist, a study lounge for the Yeager Scholars, and offices for Denman, a visiting professor and diplomat.

Adele Thorton Lewis' original oil painting of Brig. Gen. Charles E. "Chuck" Yeager is displayed in the reception area of the Yeager Suite located on the second floor of Old Main.

Life went on while we were at the beach, working or just plain lounging around. Some events you may have missed during the summer of '87:

ATHLETICS

Basketball standout Dwayne Lewis was declared academically ineligible. Keith Richard replaced Dan Bell as assistant basketball coach. Fairfield got a new look with artificial turf.

MARSHALL COMMONS

Plans for a five-story complex with fast-food restaurants, university offices and apartments were approved by the Board of Regents in July.

HOUSING

For the third straight year, Marshall closed housing applications.

CHANGES

Despite a 5 percent pay increase, more than 20 faculty members have left Marshall this year. Faculty members leaving included Dr. Corey Lock, former chairman of teacher education; Dr. Olen Jones, vice president for support services; and Dr. Allen Mori, dean of College of Education. Buster Neel, vice president for financial affairs, is retaining that position and also become executive vice president of the university.

AIDS

Along with schools like Johns Hopkins University and Baylor University, Marshall's School of Medicine received a $1.4 million grant to test AIDS vaccines.

GIFT

A Marshall graduate donated $1 million to the university to endow a chair in the Department of Political Science.

NITZSCHKE

The president visited to the Middle East where he met with Arab leaders to discuss exchange programs.

New student senators sworn in; equal representation discussed

Five new representatives were sworn into Student Senate Tuesday and were immediately thrust into discussions including equal representation of students and faculty on the Student Conduct and Welfare Committee.

Student Body President Brendan "Scooby" Leary, south Charleston senior, said equal representation of students and faculty on the committee is on its way to being accomplished.

The committee consists of eight-faculty members, five undergraduates and two graduate students. "By electing another graduate student to the committee, we'll have accomplished equal representation," Leary said.

Migration

In addition, he said most the success of most state economies is determined by what is happening in the overall state economy.

"We have to make sure the people we do train are employable in a changing economy."

For this reason, Adkins said the state probably should gear education toward a liberal arts format rather than a vocational one because a broad education would better prepare people in the long run.

Re-paying student loans after graduation adds another dimension to the puzzle, the director of financial aid said. Students who are educated and employable leave the state because they fear they cannot find jobs that will allow them to pay off the loans, Ed Miller said.

Miller, whose dissertation concerned the effects repayment of student loans has on former students, said he found 22 percent of the 726 students from whom he collected data said they believed leaving the state was necessary

Former MU chairmen die

By STEPHEN MCKEOWN
Reporter

Two long-time Marshall University faculty members, Dr. Raymond E. Janssen and Dr. Jack R. Brown, have died in the past week.

Janssen was chairman of the Department of Geology before retiring in 1969. He died in his Huntington home Thursday and was buried in Oaklawn Memorial Park, Huntington.

Brown was chairman of the Department of English prior to his retirement in 1974. He died Monday at the age of 76 at his home in Huntington. He is survived by his wife, Dr. Barbara B. Brown, professor of English.

A memorial service for Brown is scheduled for 4:30 p.m. today in the Campus Christian Center. It will be conducted by Rev. Lander L. Beale. Klingel-Carpenter Mortuary is in charge of arrangements. The body will not be available for viewing.

Brown received his undergraduate degree from Ohio Wesleyan University, and his doctorate from Northestern University. He was co-founder of University Honors program. He also was co-founder of the Marshall University Research Board.

Before coming to Marshall, Brown taught at Roanoke College in Salem, Virginia, and at Baldwin-Wallace College in Berea, Ohio.

Donations in his memory can be made to the Jack R. Brown English Scholarship Fund in care of the Marshall University Foundation.

During his early career, Janssen organized and constructed geological and botanical exhibits at the Field Museum and Museum of Science and History in Chicago. He also designed and constructed exhibits for the Chicago-World's Fair of 1933 as well as for the Texas Centennial Exposition of 1935.

An authority on the origin of coal and fossil plants, Janssen established the geology museum at Marshall before his retirement in 1969. Janssen was the author of eight books and had had various articles published in national journals, magazines and encyclopedias.

Med School at crossroads; tough decisions ahead

By KIMBERLY MITCHELL
Special Correspondent

This year will not be an easy one for the School of Medicine, President Dale F. Nitzschke said at the school's opening exercises Tuesday night in the Don Morris Room.

Nitzschke was referring to the effect of the new state education budget, which cost the School of Medicine nearly $200,000 for this academic year.

"Get behind the program or get on board," Nitzschke told students during the informational session. "We need to realize that we are all part of a very, very important family."

Nitzschke said that the school has reached a crossroads and the decisions that are made from now on will greatly affect its destiny.

"I suspect after all is said and done... the School of Medicine will be far better off for going through these difficult times," he said.

Despite the budget cuts in the School of Medicine, it is fast becoming known as one of the principal research centers in the East. It has a total of $2.2 million in research funding, including a $1.4 million grant from the National Institute of Health to study vaccines for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. It is only one of six schools in the country to participate in the testing.

Bobcats won't be easy, Chaump says

OU freshman quarterback may ride bench; Coach says senior could get nod Saturday

By GREG STONE
Sports Editor

George Chaump leaned against a car on Fairfield's parking lot after practice Tuesday, looking into the setting sun. "What am I looking for Saturday (against Ohio University)? A good, hard, tough game."

"I know it sounds like a coaching cliché," Chaump said, concerning the Herd's 1:30 p.m. clash with the Bobcats in Athens. "But that's exactly what I expect. They're (OU) much improved from last year, their defense is not apt to give up the big play and they're more conservative offensively. We're not going to sack them 13 times like we did last year (in a 21-7 Herd win) or intercept passes."

"I like a lot of their people," Chaump said of OU, which dropped its opener at West Virginia last week, 23-3. The Bobcats finished 1-10 last year. He singled out linebackers John Evangelista, a 6-2, 228-pound junior, and Doug Mangen, a 6-1, 207-pound senior.

Chaump said he was impressed with the Bobcats' play against West Virginia. "Sure, they gave up three touchdowns, but one was on a third and 17, another was the result of a fumble, and the last was near the end of the game. So, it wasn't like they were being pushed around."

Bobcat Coach Cleve Bryant returned Chaump's compliments. "I've been watching films of the Morehead game, and the score could have easily been 42-0," Bryant, 3-19 in two years at OU, said. "They made some early turnovers, but they overcame them. That's the mark of a good team."

Among the Herd players to impress Bryant were tight end Sean Doctor, tailback Ron Darby, free safety Mark Snyder, linebacker John Spellacy, and noseguards Orlando O'Farrill and Preston Washington.

"From the looks of last week's game, (300-plus passing yards for Marshall), passing looks to be Marshall's strength," Bryant said. "But with Darby back there with his speed and acceleration, you never know."

Bryant said he wasn't sure if freshman quarterback Anthony Thornton, who started the opener, would start Saturday. He said junior Mike Scott or last year's starter, senior Bruce Porter, may get the nod.

Chaump said he was surprised Bryant is considering starting someone else. "It looked like they were gearing their offense around him (Thornton)," Chaump said.

Marshall dominated the second half last week against Morehead, after a slow start.

Quarterback Tony Petersen threw four first-half interceptions, but remained poised. In the second half, he hit six of 10 passes for 184 yards and two touchdowns. One was a splendidly thrown 80-yard game breaker to split end Mike Barber that put Marshall up 15-0 with 3:07 left in the third quarter.

"Coach Chaump called a hitch and go," Barber said. "When Tony pumped (faked the throw) the corner came up. And when he came up, I knew it was a touchdown."

Petersen also connected with Barber for a near-touchdown pass on the Herd's first possession in the second half. Barber, who set a Marshall single-season receiving record last year with 64 catches, ran out of bounds on the Morehead 10. Four plays later, Ron Darby was stopped on fourthdown at the one-inch line. A different cut to the end zone might have resulted in a score, according to Barber.

Marshall's defense was relied upon to stop Morehead after Petersen's rocky start. Inside linebacker John Spellacy, who recovered a fumble to stop Morehead's first drive, said it's all in a day's work.

Marshall's Ron Darby is finding the going a bit tough in this encounter with Morehead's Keith Ferrell, but the Herd tailback was the leading rusher in Saturday's 29-0 first game victory.

Herd runner Richard Stewart leads a Cedarville College runner in a meet last weekend at Marshall. Marshall finished second and Stewart placed third in this contest.

Coach says meet offers lessons

By ANGELA LESTER
Reporter

Cross Country Coach Dennis Brachna said he was pleased with the performance of the men's and women's team at the 16th annual Marshall Invitational in which both teams placed second.

Eastern Kentucky University won the men's division with 47 points to Marshall's 48.

Both teams will travel to Bowling Green, Ohio Friday to challenge Bowling Green and Ohio universities.

David Ball, Scott Depot senior, was the individual champion of the men's division. Ball completed the five-mile race in 25 minutes and 52 seconds, ten seconds before Eric Fillinger of Cedarville (Ohio) College.

Coming in third was Richard Stewart, Fayetteville senior, with a time of 26:18. David Marks, Nitro senior, came in seventh with a time of 26:32.

Charlie Ward, Bellaire, Ohio junior, running with a fever, finished 18th with a time of 27:26.

Ball said he believes it was a good meet, but he said he wished the Herd could have won. He said, "We can still contend for the Southern Conference champion-ship. That's what we want to work for. He gave some of the credit for his victory to Malone (Ohio) College transfer, Duane Miller, who ran exhibition and finished second.

Brachna said both teams did well considering they only had one week of practice before the meet. He said he was most impressed by the women's team, though, and believes they have a good shot at the Southern Conference title. The time difference between the team's first and fifth runner was a little over one minute. This, he said, was a good indicator of the potential of Marshall's team.

Marshall's top women's finisher was Tina Maynard, Wheelersburg, Ohio sophomore, who finished fourth in 17:21. The top runner of the women's division was Kris Snow of EKU who finished in 16:46. Concord, Ohio junior, Sue Kepich, came in sixth with a time of 17:32.

Peebles, Ohio recruit Angie Haslam, who led early in the race, finished seventh with a time of 17:36.

The women's times were especially fast because the course was a quarter mile shorter than regulation.

First in the women's division was EKU with a total of 38 points. Marshall was second with 41 points. Third was East Tennessee State with 44 points. This was the first time the Marshall women's team had ever beat ETSU.

Chambers critical of stadium study

By SUSAN K. LAMBERT
Reporter

A study on the proposed Marshall football stadium is taking a different direction than what the Speaker of the House says the Legislature intended.

"The thrust of our proposal was to ask the BOR to come up with plans for funding the stadium," Chuck Chambers (D-Cabell) said. "Our concern was how to pay for it, not the location."

In response to a House proposal, the BOR approved last week a $24,500 study to be completed by the engineering firm Stafford Heery-Fabrap to update a 106-page report it did two years ago. The original report cost $85,000.

Changes in bond markets and interest rates, to Chambers, caused members of the House of Delegates to request in March that the BOR find by Jan. 1, 1988, at least one means of funding the proposed stadium.

The proposal did not involve re-evaluating sites or phasing of construction. Both topics are among those the new study will address.

Dr. Thomas W. Cole, who recently resigned as Chancellor of the BOR, and President Dale F. Nitzschke agreed that the study was in response to the House proposal, but both said the new report would deal with the need and size of a stadium, and a feasibility of using the stadium for other academic activities.

"Too much time has elapsed since the original study was done, and there has been so much discussion that the BOR wisely said let's take another look," he said.

The victory was pretty Saturday, but the weather wasn't. (Related story, photo on Page 10)

Kickers lose first opener in five years

For the first time in five years, the soccer team lost its opening game Sept. 5 to Glasboro (N.J.) State College.

The Herd was shut out, 4-0. DeFazio said he was encouraged by the performance of new and returning players.

The Herd originally was to play Wheelersburg College Sept. 2, but the game was cancelled because the new turf at Fairfield Stadium was not ready.

In its second match of the tournament, Marshall defeated Indiana of Pa., 2-1. Saturday Marshall will face Xavier University at home.
