Budget woes hit students pocketbooks

Proposed financial plan could change process

By Paul R. Darst
Reporter

At some point, nearly every student has had to wait in the long line at the Office of Financial Aid.

As long as that line can be, however, it is not as long as it would have been if the federal government shutdown had occurred early in the semester.

"There would have been major problems if this had happened early in the term," Jack Toney, director of financial aid, said.

Currently, the office cannot process applications for Supplemental and Pell grants, Toney said.

"For the Federal Direct Student Loan Program, money is still available and it's business as usual," he said. "Money for those loans has already been allocated."

"Thankfully, not many students are finalizing their financial aid this time of year."

The federal government partially shut down midnight Tuesday after the President and Congress failed to pass a temporary spending measure that would have kept the government operating.

All but essential personnel have been furloughed until the temporary measure is passed.

Furloughed personnel include many at the U.S. Department of Education overseeing education loans of which Marshall students take advantage.

Toney said he learned of the effects on his office over the Internet at 4 p.m. Tuesday.

The proposed budget contains provisions that could greatly affect the Financial Aid Office, Toney said.

"Our primary concern is the direct loan program cut back," Toney said.

The direct loan program is run by the U.S. Department of Education and accounts for nearly 40 percent of student loans nationwide, Toney said.

All loans obtained at Marshall University are part of the direct loan program.

"It simplifies the process and is a benefit to the students," Toney said.

If the proposed budget becomes law, three of four universities which are now in the direct loan program would have to return to the Stafford loan program, Toney said.

If the shutdown lasts through the beginning of next semester, federal grants and loans will not be available, Toney said.

Sports certified by NCAA

By Chris Johnson
Sports Editor

Marshall University President J. Wade Gilley announced in a press conference yesterday the athletic program has received certification by the NCAA.

The certification means Marshall has demonstrated it operates its athletic program in substantial conformity with operating principles adopted by the NCAA's Division One membership.

"A significant number of members of the Marshall community pulled together to make the process work and, much like our student athletes, demonstrated how teamwork pays dividends," Gilley said. "This NCAA certification is an achievement in which all of us can take a great deal of pride."

Marshall's committee for NCAA certification was led by Linda Wilkinson, associate professor in the Community and Technical College, and David Schnase, athletic compliance specialist.

The purpose of the certification process is to ensure integrity in the schools' athletic operations and to help improve operations.

Certification examines the Athletic Department's academic and financial integrity, governance and commitment to rules compliance and to equity. The self-study committee analyzed these areas and submitted a report, followed by a visit from an evaluation team assigned by the NCAA. Athletic Director Lee Moon said the evaluation was a long process taking more than a year.

Moon said, "I want to commend our self-study committee members for their long hours and work ethic. This recognition by the NCAA shows that our five-year plan to develop and enhance all of our programs was carefully executed and that we followed through with it."

Developments in the Athletic Department during the last five years include a new softball field, improved softball facilities, women's tennis courts, a women's track locker room, achieving the maximum number of full-time coaches in all programs and a men's soccer field now being constructed.

Gilley said two million dollars has been spent in the last two and a half years on women's sports.

He said that was a sign of the Athletic Department's commitment to diversity and equal opportunities among student athletes.

Delayed changes back on schedule for bookstore

By Stanford E. Angion
Reporter

Reorganization of the Marshall University Bookstore originally set to begin Oct. 23 has been delayed because of problems acquiring construction materials, Michael Campbell, bookstore manager, said.

Campbell said timing is the problem. The company had problems getting the materials together at the time when they were needed.

Campbell said reorganization officially will begin Monday, Nov. 27.

"The store will be closed Nov. 23 and 24 during Thanksgiving break, but will reopen Nov. 25 if Marshall has a playoff game," Campbell said.

The reorganization will include installation of four checkout registers and four sets of coin-operated lockers, which Campbell said were requested by students.

Use of lockers will be free for bookstore customers.

Campbell said the bookstore might be closed for more than the Thanksgiving break to complete the reorganization. Should this happen, it will operate from the lower level textbook section.

Items students need to purchase from the first floor bookstore will be available in the textbook store, Campbell said.

"After reorganization is complete, the bookstore will be having a student appreciation day sale. Students will be offered 20 percent off all items excluding textbooks and any items already previously discounted," Campbell said.

Hooters: Guys not cool

ATLANTA (AP) — Men don't high kick with Radio City Rockettes or shake pompoms with the Dallas Cowboy cheerleaders.

Hooters restaurants, therefore, should be given the same leeway when it comes to gender-based hiring, the chain's parent company argues.

Hooters of America Inc. is fighting to continue hiring only women waitresses, who wear skimpy orange shorts and tight white T-shirts or tank tops while serving up chicken wings and burgers.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission said Hooters should hire men to work alongside the women, a recommendation the company said it would ignore.

Hooters bought full-page ads in Wednesday's USA Today and The Washington Post, featuring a burly mustachioed man wearing a blond wig and Hooters uniform, holding a plate of chicken wings and exclaiming: "Come on, Washington. Get a grip."

Executives of the Atlanta-based chain say their customers expect to see sexy, All-American women at their restaurants.

The company has built a reputation on their perky Hooters Girls.

Some of the mostly male clientele at Hooters at Underground Atlanta were in hearty agreement, many scoffing at the notion of being served by men.

"I wouldn't want a man waiting on me," said David Parker, as a waitress wearing a snug tank top with the phrase, "Delightfully tacky, yet Unrefined" printed on the back, refilled his glass with iced tea.

Sheriff's spa crack down has citizens cracked up

COLDWATER, Mich. (AP) — When the sheriff's department suspected that a health spa was actually a brothel, the No. 2 man stepped forward for the undercover assignment.

Then he went again. And again. And again.

Now the spa's future is in question, and folks in this small town are chuckling about the details in the explicit court affidavit of Branch County Undersheriff Gary Abbott, which was reported in the local newspaper.

"Some people in the community will get some laughs out of it, sure," Sheriff Ted

Gordon said. "But a house of prostitution in Branch County is not something people accept here."

A sign on an interstate near this south-central Michigan town of 9,600 invites weary travelers to stop at the 24-hour Coldwater Health Spa, where a one-hour massage costs $60.

Suspicious that customers were getting more for their money, the sheriff sent in Abbott, who took along a tape recorder. According to Abbott's affidavit, he was massaged for 10 to 15 minutes before the attendant offered to masturbate him, which he accepted. He returned four more times for the X-rated massage.

Gordon insisted that Abbott also had to agree to some sex acts if the department wanted to put the spa out of business.

Bosnian Serb leaders charged

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — An international tribunal Thursday indicted the Bosnian Serbs' top two leaders for more war crimes, charging them with genocide in the Muslim enclave of Srebrenica.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic and army commander Gen. Ratko Mladic are already charged with war crimes against Bosnia's Muslim and Croat populations, including attacks on Sarajevo.

The new indictments come just days after newspapers reported that Mladic and Karadzic agreed to relinquish power once a U.S. sponsored peace deal is signed, in exchange for not being handed over to the war crimes tribunal.

The indictment charges Karadzic and Mladic with crimes against humanity and genocide.

Karadzic and Mladic are accused of ordering atrocities committed in July against the Bosnian Muslim population of the U.N.-designated safe area of Srebrenica. The tribunal called the massacre one of the cruelest and most bloody acts of the war in the former Yugoslavia.

The latest indictments against the two appeared certain to further isolate the Bosnian Serb leadership at a time where the leaders of Serbia, Bosnia and Croatia are trying to hammer out a U.S.-brokered peace accord.

The charges will have no immediate effect on peace talks near Dayton, Ohio,

"These crimes were committed by the Bosnian Serb forces under the control of Radovan Karadzic. He authorized the attack and the subsequent additional criminal actions. These crimes were carried out by the Bosnian Serb forces under the command of Ratko Mladic who was seen at several locations ... where systematic mass killings took place."

Christian Chartier
tribunal spokesman

which Karadzic and Mladic were barred from attending because of the earlier indictments. Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic is negotiating on behalf of Bosnia's Serbs.

The Serbs deported thousands of Muslims to Bosnian government lines after reportedly separating out men and boys.

About 8,000 refugees have been missing ever since, according to the international Red Cross, and Western governments have said evidence, including photos of alleged mass graves, suggests mass executions.

"These crimes were committed by the Bosnian Serb forces under the control of Radovan Karadzic," tribunal spokesman Christian Chartier said.

"He authorized the attack and the subsequent additional criminal actions. These crimes were carried out by the Bosnian Serb forces under the command of Ratko Mladic who was seen at several locations ... where systematic mass killings took place."

U.S. spy photos have indicated mass graves around Nova Kasaba, west of Srebrenica.

The Serbs deny mass executions and have suggested the remains are those of some of 3,000 Bosnian government soldiers killed defending Srebrenica.

Bosnian Serb authorities have rejected U.N. demands for access to the area.

Although this is the second indictment against Karadzic and Mladic, it is still unlikely either will be handed over for trial. Serb authorities reject the tribunal's jurisdiction and refuse to hand over suspects.

Set up in 1993 by the U.N. Security Council in response to mounting evidence of atrocities in the former Yugoslavia, the tribunal is powerless to intervene directly in the conflict. The tribunal is also short on funds.

Of the 52 suspects so far indicted by the U.N. court, 45 are Serb.

Airplane companies may merge

NEW YORK (AP) — Boeing Co. and McDonnell Douglas Corp. are discussing a merger that would create the world's largest aerospace and defense company with $35 billion in annual sales, The Wall Street Journal reported today.

The newspaper quoted sources close to the talks as saying that Boeing has been pushing for an outright merger. Others said an agreement short of a merger, in which the companies exchange major assets but remain independent, also is possible.

A merger between the companies would shake financial markets and create an aircraft maker that would redefine the buying and selling of planes for almost every purpose, the Journal said.

Boeing dominates in sales of commercial aircraft, while McDonnell Douglas is a leader in sales of military planes.

The two companies would have had combined 1994 sales of $35.1 billion, dwarfing Lockheed Martin, the current aerospace and defense leader with 1994 sales of $23 billion, the newspaper said.

Potential antitrust concerns are one potential roadblock. Another factor that could complicate talks is that employees hold about 17.4 percent of McDonnell-Douglas shares. Company officers and directors hold another 5.8 percent, the newspaper said.

CBS source paid $12,000 for help on story

NEW YORK (AP) — The source for the tobacco story that "60 Minutes" canceled was promised he wouldn't have to pay any costs if a libel lawsuit resulted from the report and had been paid $12,000 for his help on a previous story, according to reports published today.

The segment focused on a former Brown & Williamson Corp. employee who now opposes smoking. CBS said its lawyers ordered "60 Minutes" not to air it because the employee had a contract with Brown & Williamson that barred him from talking about the company.

The New York Times and Wall Street Journal said the source had been paid for his work on a previous story, and a CBS lawyer had agreed to indemnify the source from any libel action that resulted from the report.

The Journal reported that "60 Minutes" producer Lowell Bergman agreed that he would not air any interview with the source unless the source gave permission.

A lawyer for the source sent a letter to CBS stating that the source was withholding his consent to air the interview and would construe any mention of him as a promise by CBS to pay all his costs and damages in any suit.

Accreditation is the buzzword being heard on campus lately

▼ MU's athletic program is the latest to benefit from an accreditation review.

Accreditation seems to be the key word on campus lately, with the recent visit of the North Central Association team.

But, the university as a whole isn't the only part of the campus that has recently been under scrutiny for accreditation renewal.

For a year now, the university has been undergoing the process of accrediting the sports programs.

Marshall is one of only 50 universities participating in this new form of accreditation.

see related story, page 1

The university should be commended for improving itself and becoming the first of the 50 universities to receive full accreditation from the National Collegiate Athletics Association.

Among the improvements cited by the accreditation team were new facilities, scholarships and the addition of full-time coaches.

So, despite whatever may have been thought about the decision to build new tennis courts, or a track locker room or the construction of a new men's soccer stadium, it's obvious to see that there are positive outcomes.

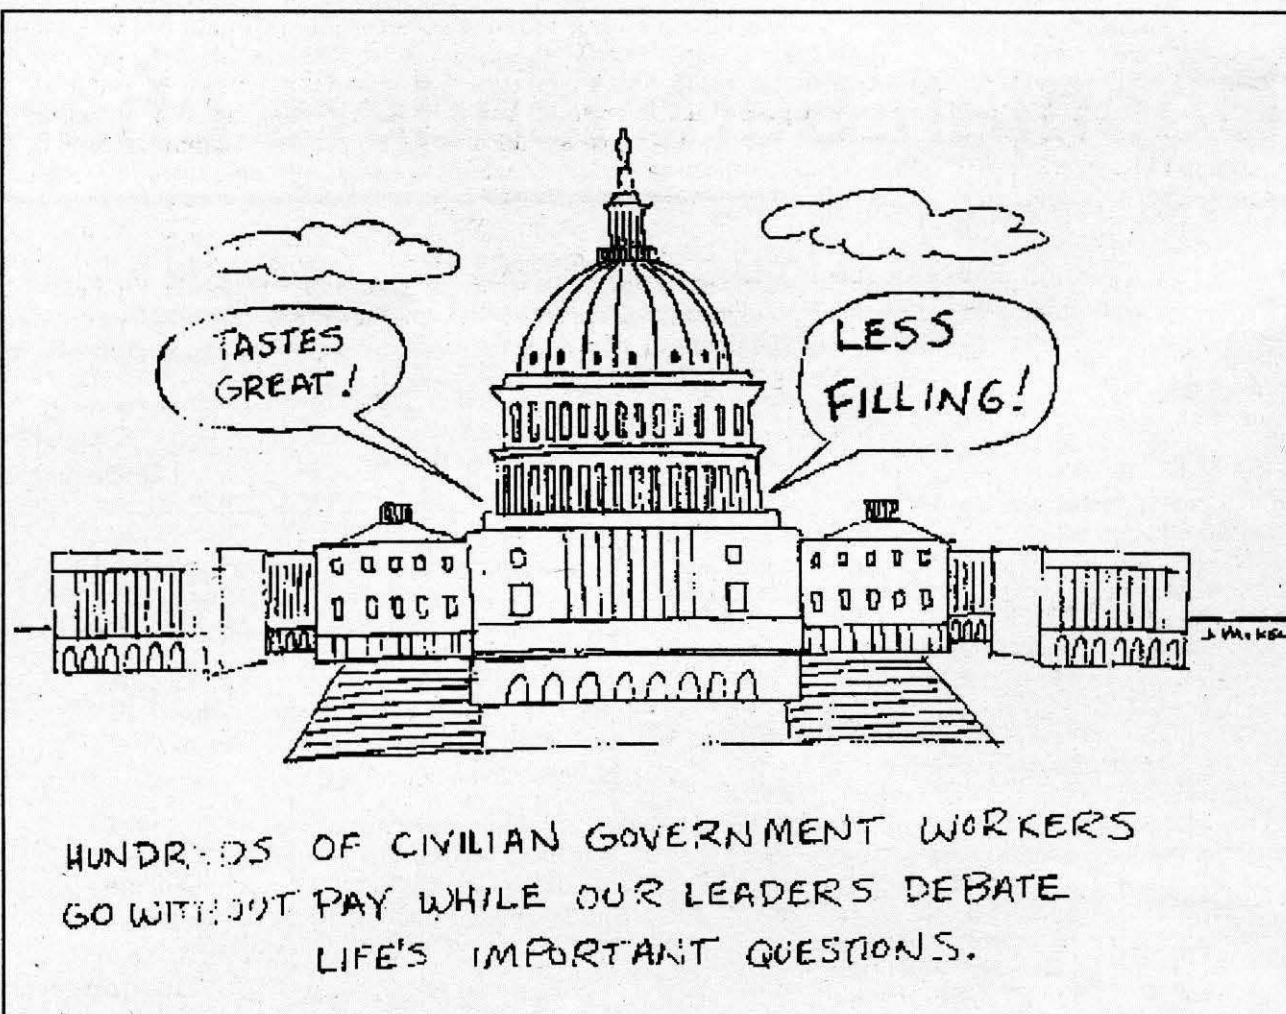

Marshall appears to be heading on the right track toward a successful future.

We've got many bright spots ahead to look forward to.

We should all be proud of the latest positive report about the university.

It's about time that people sat up and took notice of the changes that are being made on this campus.

Whether it's the accreditation of the sports program or the proposed new library, the school looks as if it's on the cutting edge of growth and change for the future.

Seating problem is still a hassle for us

To the editor:

Seeing as I am responding to something that I just read in The Parthenon, this seems to be the appropriate place for a response.

As if it is not bad enough that Lee Moon (our poor excuse for an athletic director) took seats away from us for the upcoming basketball season, it gets worse.

Now, he wants to cash in on the seats that he didn't take away. This really disturbs me.

I am one of the most avid fans to come to these games. In the last three years of football games, I have only missed three home games. One of them was for my wedding (even then, my wife and I listened to it on the radio during the reception). I only missed two home basketball games last year, and if I would have had the money, I would have been at many of the away games as well.

It is people like me who are getting the short end of the stick here (then again, it is a classic trait to screw over those who care the most).

I am outraged by Moon's utter disrespect and contempt for the students that make this school and athletic program what it is.

Oh, yeah, one other thing, this bull about us not filling the seats is merely an excuse so that the Athletic Department can put more money in their greedy little pockets and (yet again) screw us students!

I attended several games last year when I couldn't even find a seat anywhere except the nosebleed section, and if anybody happened to notice during those times when the seats were not full, neither was the rest of the Henderson Center.

Sometimes, I wish Moon would get a clue or get out (hey, I can dream, can't I?).

Ed Meadows,
Huntington, W.Va.

Writer misinformed, had good intentions

To the editor:

I am responding to the article concerning whether or not students really want a yearbook.

I would like to clarify some of the misleading information that the author gave about the Chief Justice.

I know the writer of the article wouldn't publish false information if they knew they were false or incorrect, so I am writing to tell the truth about the SGA's involvement with the yearbook.

The writer said the SGA gave the yearbook $3,000.

I know the author was not at the meeting in which the bill was tabled until more information was gathered.

The comment, "Another charge besides the student fees that are already dedicated to publishing the yearbook," is also incorrect.

There is no money allotted to the publication of the yearbook.

No money allocation is why the yearbook is asking for help from the SGA in the first place. If the author would have asked or done a little research, they would have found that no money was allocated for the Chief Justice this year.

I don't think the author of the article is deliberately trying to give bad information, nor do I think they are deliberately trying to down play the job that SGA does for students.

SGA's most recent act of improving student participation is having the meetings out the SGA office once a month.

SGA is coming to you to first improve communications, second to make it convenient for students to attend meetings and voice their opinions and third to let the students see what SGA does every week for the students.

I hope that if you have a complaint you will come to an SGA meeting and we will do what we can to help you.

If you come, you will be heard. You would also see the role that the SGA plays for the university.

I don't think the author is out to tell false information, I just think they are misinformed.

Kim L. Capeheart,
College of Science senator

Higher education topic of candidates' forum

By K. Melinda Cater
Reporter

"The individual who becomes governor of West Virginia has serious influence on whether people have jobs and students have money to attend school," said Brendan S. Leary, executive director of the West Virginia Higher Education Coalition.

The group of 1,400 faculty, students and staff from across West Virginia is sponsoring a 'Meet the Candidates' forum this weekend in Flatwoods, W.Va.

The meeting begins at 5:30 p.m. today at the Days Inn Conference Center in Flatwoods. Each gubernatorial candidate faces a 90-minute interview session with members of the group.

"We hope to get an idea about what each candidate stands for and what programs he or she supports. Through this process, we hope to endorse a candidate for governor by the end of the year," Leary said.

Leary said WVHEC examined the list of candidates and invited those who it felt were major candidates. All of the candidates contacted agreed to the interviews.

"In the past, candidates have not addressed higher education. This election, we are forcing candidates to deal with these issues," Leary said.

Before the event, each candidate received a questionnaire and was asked to provide written responses to four questions, Leary said. The first part of the interview is a chance for candidates to answer these questions.

"We asked candidates what programs they support to improve the quality of higher education, whether they agree with the strategies in Senate Bill 547, and what their plans are to improve student access. We also asked if they support a constitutional amendment to allow non-policy making faculty to serve in the legislature," he said.

The remainder of each interview is open for questions from members of the WVHEC.

"It is vitally important that people get involved in this process," Leary said. "We encourage anyone with an interest in the future of higher education to attend."

Joe Manchin and John McBride will not be able to attend due to scheduling conflicts. Interviews with the two candidates will occur at a later date.

For more information, contact Leary at 1-800-998-9471.

Campus Christian Center to offer taste of tradition

Turkey, dressing, mashed potatoes and gravy are traditional Thanksgiving foods, but many international students, who do not have the holiday in their countries, mistakenly think that all Americans eat at McDonald's, Burger King and Pizza Hut.

The Campus Christian Center is sponsoring a Thanksgiving dinner Monday at 5 p.m.

"The dinner is a traditional event especially for international students," Rev. Jim A. McCune, campus pastor, said.

He said it is a good opportunity for international students to get together with local students, have dinner together and share a good time.

"Many international students just don't have an opportunity to have dinner like that," he said.

He said that it is a good chance for local students to meet international students and develop their relationships.

The dinner is free of charge but some contribution will be appreciated, he said.

More information is available by calling McCune at 696-3054.

U. of Cape Coast professor to speak on African economics

By Tommie Casey Lewis
Reporter

Omicron Delta Epsilon, Marshall's economics honor society, is sponsoring a campus visit by Peter Aglobitse, a lecturer at the University of Cape Coast in Ghana, Africa.

Aglobitse will speak to students and faculty today at 4:30 p.m. in Corbly Hall 267. The topic of the discussion is "Economic Reality in Africa Today."

Travis Holley, president of Omicron Delta Epsilon, said, "This lecture is an excellent opportunity for students to learn about some of the problems faced by the people of Africa as they struggle to improve their economy and their quality of life."

The visit is also the first step in establishing a sister relationship between Marshall and the University of Cape Coast. Dr. Harlan Smith, assistant professor of economics at Marshall, taught at the University of Cape Coast during the 1993-1994 school year as a Fulbright Scholar.

The long-range goal is to bring an African professor to teach economics at Marshall.

Aglobitse will be presented with a $400 donation to help buy supplies for students at the University of Cape Coast. Aglobitse will also be made an honorary member of the group.

Marshall students, staff and faculty are welcome to attend the lecture. More information is available by calling 696-3233.

Traveling students can get generic ID

If you plan to travel abroad soon, there is a card available that will give you the benefits of being a student.

The International Student Identity Card, often called the ISIC, is available at the Office of International Student Services for $18 with a valid Marshall ID and a passport-sized photo.

Because the Marshall ID may not be understood in a foreign country, the ISIC provides students with a document that is acceptable around the world as proof of student status.

The card gives students discounts on airfares, museums, theaters and hotels.

Eric K. Spears, coordinator of International Student Service, said he saved 10 pounds on train fare when he stayed in the United Kingdom.

"You save money immediately and you just continue on saving after you purchase the card," Spears said.

Students who purchase the ISIC automatically receive basic insurance coverage when traveling outside the United States.

More information is available by contacting the Office of International Student Services at 696-2379.

Black students recognized for academic achievements

By Traci Mallett
Reporter

The African American Students' Program will welcome 80 Tri-State African American juniors to participate and be recognized in the Outstanding Black High School Student Weekend tomorrow and Saturday.

Students participating in the event were chosen because of an earned 3.0 GPA and recommendations from teachers or administrators at their high school.

Coordinator of African American Students' Programs, Kenneth Blue, said both students and parents are brought to Marshall to receive information about higher education and Marshall University.

Some of the activities include a banquet during which the students are given certificates of achievement as well as a potential tuition waiver based upon their GPA when they come to school, Blue said.

The motivational speaker at the banquet will be Marshall University alumna, Vicki Smith. Smith was a graduate in 1975 and teaches at Spring Hill Elementary School.

"These students are high school juniors so it's giving them time to think about Marshall. As well as talking to the students about Marshall, we talk to them about higher education even though it is a Marshall University recruitment effort," Blue said.

Blue said the next day, the students talk with a panel of Marshall students about college life while the parents meet with faculty and administrators to discuss the educational system and what they need to know to prepare their children for academic careers.

About 25 percent of the students who attend the weekend enroll at Marshall, Blue said.

"There are some reasons why students do not come to Marshall," he said. "There are either other schools they are interested in or they have scholarships that we do not offer."

Bowling lanes included in renovation plans

By Stanford E. Angion
Reporter

The same firm that designed the Memorial Student Center 25 years ago has been selected to help design the university's bookstore expansion and bowling alley renovation.

Recently, Dean and Dean architect firm was selected to design the student center project, said K. Edward Grose, senior vice president for operations.

The plan is to expand the existing bookstore on the first floor by building an additional section to it, Raymond F. Welty, director of auxiliary services, said. However, the specifics for the plan have not been completed.

The expansion will be paid for with the $725,604.97 that Follett Colleges Stores presented to President J. Wade Gilley in exchange for an inventory the company required when it took over operations, said Raymond F. Welty, director of auxiliary services.

President Gilley said Follett will contribute $100,000 toward the expansion.

The architect firm will develop a plan for the renovation of the bowling lanes in the student center.

"The renovation will cost approximately $180,000. The money to pay for the renovation will come from bond funds," Welty said.

Each student pays $18 a semester in fees for bonds to pay off the building and cover the cost of major replacements and repairs. The building will be paid for in 2009.

WVU, Marshall enrollments down

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — West Virginia University's 1995 fall enrollment decreased by more than 4 percent, while Marshall University's decreased about 1 percent, higher education officials said.

WVU has 21,517 students compared with 22,500 last year. Marshall has 12,461 compared with 12,659 last year.

'We're not afraid' — Hofstra coach

By Mike Taylor
Staff Writer

The way Hofstra coach Joe Gardi sees it, the only way his team is going to become one of the top I-AA teams in the country is to play top I-AA powers like Marshall.

"We're not afraid to play anybody," Gardi said. "We've been fearless."

The Flying Dutchmen are new to the I-AA level.

Just four years ago, Hofstra was making play-off appearances in Division III football.

Since Hofstra has been at the I-AA level, it has had quick success.

In the last two years, the Flying Dutchmen have an 18-1-1 record.

This year, Hofstra is 10-0 and ranked number seven in the country.

With its recent success, Hofstra is earning respect from other teams.

"We're starting to be known at the I-AA level. People are dropping us for no reason," Gardi said.

"Until I see them play, I can't really say much," Herd coach Jim Donnan said.

Hofstra is a team loaded with upperclassmen.

Fifteen of its 22 starters are seniors.

Gardi said although his team has several upperclassmen, he is surprised the team has played so well this season after last year's 8-1-1 record.

"We're very surprised. We graduated 16 seniors and lost a total of 25 players because of grades and other things," Gardi said.

Last week against Rhode Island, Hofstra won 37-3.

Hofstra field goal kicker Dave Ettinger kicked three field goals, one of which was a 51-yarder.

Quarterback Kharon Brown passed for 164 yards and two touchdowns.

"Our key is to contain their quarterback," Donnan said.

"I think we'll be prepared for him [Brown]," Herd right tackle Jamie Wilson said.

Hofstra presents a bit of a problem for Marshall Saturday.

The Flying Dutchmen use the run-n-shoot offense which has received both criticism and praise from other coaches.

"We put the run back in run-n-shoot," Gardi said. "If you're not used to it, it could create some problems."

"We do a good job scoring on people."

"They spread you out and try to isolate their receivers," Donnan said.

Hofstra averages about 35 points a game.

Brown can both pass and run effectively.

Gardi said one week Brown could run for more than 100 yards and the next week he could pass for more than 150 yards.

However, Hofstra has yet to

Head to Head

Offensive Make-up

✓ Last week the Herd finally got Tim Martin more involved. Look for the passing game to complement the

✓ The Flying Dutchmen mix it up on offense and run a lot of trick plays. The run-n-shoot offense is putting up 35 points per game.

Defensive Make-up

✓ MU has allowed only 25 points in the last three games. B.J. Summers is now a starter and has made big plays the past two weeks.

✓ Hofstra has size and experience. The defensive line averages about 6-4 255. Nine seniors start for the Dutchmen defense. The question is, have they been tested.

Overall Make-up

✓ This is the last regular season game for seven seniors but it probably won't be the last time they play. A win against No. 7 Hofstra would add momentum heading into the playoffs.

✓ Hofstra is undefeated which is impressive no matter how tough the schedule is. But a big factor is Hofstra has never played in an environment like Marshall Stadium.

face a defense like Marshall's. The Herd leads the nation in defense and the team is limiting opponents to 15 points a game. "They're big," Gardi said.

"We've never faced anyone that big. Their defensive line is absolutely awesome."

Gardi said he is also impressed with the Herd's linebackers.

Offensively, Gardi stated the obvious when he said he wanted to stop Chris Parker.

"We told our players not be in awe of their size," Gardi said.

"We're gonna try not to be intimidated by the crowd."

As far as the Herd's offense goes, it has received a boost the last two weeks.

In its last two games the Herd has scored 83 points.

"I wish I could find some weak spots," Gardi said.

One question that has surfaced over the Hofstra team is its schedule strength.

Gardi said he and his team got tired of hearing about playing a weak schedule so he wants to send a message that the team is for real.

"They're psyched and they're fired up," Gardi said.

"They're a good team, but they haven't played as strong a schedule as we have," Wilson said.

Saturday's 1 p.m. game is the last regular season game (the playoffs start Nov. 25) for the Herd and before the game, the Herd will honor seven seniors.

Seniors players being honored are Chris Parker, Ricky Carter, Will Edwards, Jayson Grayson, Dave Honick, William Pannell and Tharen Todd.

Brett Hall/The Parthenon

Jerom Embry (16) is one of many reasons why MU's defense has been so dominant. The Thundering Herd defense is now ranked No. 1 in the nation. Teammate Melvin Cunningham said Embry is the smartest linebacker in the Southern Conference. Embry is sixth on the team in tackles with 69. He has also recorded six tackles for losses and two quarterback sacks. He leads the team with 51 solo tackles.

Student concerns being addressed

By M. Timur Dilsiz
Reporter

Student Advisory Council in the College of Business is acting as a messenger by taking students' concerns to the dean.

Dr. Calvin A. Kent, dean of College of Business, started the council three years ago as soon as he became dean.

The council works directly with the dean as a representative of the College of Business students, according to Gael M. Setliff, office administrator for the College of Business.

"They work with concerns of the students, concerns of the deans and try to keep the communication open between the students and the dean's office," Setliff said.

According to Setliff, if students have concerns, but do not know their representative, they can give their name and class standing to the dean's office and the office will find their advisory council representative.

Setliff said Dr. Kent strongly believes that college administrators and instructors are here to make sure students get a good education.

"Sometimes in the daily bureaucracy we do not notice what is going on outside the doors," Setliff said.

"The Advisory Council helps the faculty be aware of the concerns."

This past summer, the council put a monitor in the lobby of Corbly Hall to further open communications between these two groups.

The monitor displays any kind of information to help students.

Setliff said every week or two they update the monitor. "We put the student group meetings on and it's just things that concern College of Business students."

The council is composed of an elected representative from each of the College of Business student groups and one representative from each class.

The council has about 15 members elected each year.

Any College of Business student interested in applying for a seat can get an application in the dean's office. These are kept on file in the office until the next election in the fall.

Holiday season tough for some

Eating disorders cause great anxiety, anorexia, bulimia most common forms

By Paul R. Darst
Reporter

For most of us, the holidays mean relaxation, visiting with family and friends and enjoying large meals.

But some people in our society find no pleasure in eating.

For people with eating disorders, the holidays can be a very difficult time, Irene Celcer, eating disorders specialist, said.

"I think the holidays are very painful for this kind of problem," Celcer said.

Celcer, who is a certified social worker with a master's degree in psychology, recently joined the staff of the University Psychiatric Associates and started group treatment for people with eating disorders and problems.

The two most common kinds of eating disorders are anorexia and bulimia.

The victims of anorexia, 90 percent of whom are women, have an intense fear of becoming fat, have a distorted body image even while they are thin and have lost at least 25 percent of their body weight.

People with bulimia, 90 percent of whom are also women, fear gaining weight, but have recurring episodes of binge eating, during which large amounts of food are ingested in a short period of time.

"By large amounts of food, I mean an amount of food that another person would not be able to eat in a similar social situation," Celcer said.

Feelings of shame and remorse, coupled with exercise, fasting or self-induced vomiting follow such binges.

"The idea is to be firm and clear, to allow the friend to know that you are concerned and that you're not going to let her die, but that you will be respectful to her preferences and her body."

Irene Celcer,
eating disorder specialist

People who exhibit some of the symptoms of an eating disorder, but not all, are said to have eating problems, which are just as serious.

"There are many grey areas with this problem," Celcer said.

Although eating disorders may appear to be biological, they are really about having control over one's life and are culturally induced.

"One thing that I truly believe is that an eating problem is a way in which we try to cope with the myriad of things that we have no control over, and is often the only way we know to do so," Celcer said.

"It's a distorted way of trying to get some control, and they really believe they are helping themselves."

Many people do not know how to cope with the everyday stress in life, and the images put forth by society do nothing to help the situation, Celcer said.

"To me, what makes it terrible is the effort that goes in to maintaining a certain weight just because of certain ideals that are socially based," Celcer said.

"We forget that pictures of models in magazines are airbrushed."

"We would never, never meet the standards of the woman on the cover of a magazine because every little flaw of her body has been fixed."

People with eating disorders believe that thinness is their personal preference when it is really a cultural idea, Celcer said.

Although there are several ways to treat eating disorders, Celcer will focus on the group treatment method for now.

"Why I think a group is good is because it cuts through the feeling of isolation and shame," Celcer said. "As lonely as it feels to have an eating problem, people are not alone."

"More people than I would like to think have it. It doesn't have to be an isolated thing."

Research has revealed that between 13 and 20 percent of college women have eating disorders, Celcer said.

There are important things to keep in mind when confronting a friend or family member who has an eating disorder. I think one thing not to do is start a fight," Celcer said.

"The idea is to be firm and clear, to allow the friend to know that you are concerned and that you're not going to let her die, but that you will be respectful to her preferences and her body."

University applicants below ACT standards on the rise

By William B. Lucas
Reporter

More and more Marshall applicants are not meeting the ACT requirements for math and English, but the university offers students a second chance through two programs in the Community and Technical College.

Statistics provided by the admissions office indicate an increase in the number of incoming freshmen falling below the minimum requirements the past three years.

The biggest increase came this fall due to tougher admission standards.

"There are a number of reasons for the lower scores," Dr. James Harless, dean of admissions said. "It's not always a problem at the high schools. Sometimes students are not sure if they're going on to college or not. So they don't prepare themselves adequately, then at the last minute they change their minds and apply for admission."

The state policy regarding standards and admission procedures for undergraduate education provides for educational opportunities commensurate with the interest and abilities of West Virginia residents.

Harless said, "The intent is to grant full access to all West Virginia residents."

Marshall complies with that policy by offering courses in the Community and Technical College for students who do not meet the standard for admission.

"We have two programs designed to provide opportunities for people who need additional work on their academic skills," Dr. Maurice E. Ryan, associate dean of the Community and Technical College, said.

"We have a transition program for students who do not meet one or more of the admission requirements. They could be missing one of the core courses or their ACTs or SATs are marginal."

The transition program includes courses in math, science and communications. According to the 1995-97 Marshall University undergraduate catalog, these courses do not count toward graduation.

However, Ryan said they must be completed before the student can enroll in the required courses.

The goal is to provide an opportunity to improve academic skills and put them on a level comparable to other students at the university, he said.

"This program is for those people who need to improve ACT scores in either math or English to get into courses required for graduation," Ryan said.

Linda Wilkinson, associate professor and chairwoman of developmental and general studies, said many of the transition students are not a high risk for failure as the developmental students.

"For whatever reason many of them come to Marshall unprepared and a lot of the time it has nothing to do with their ability," she said.

Wilkinson said, "Eighty and a half percent of the students completed a developmental course in communications with a passing grade, but only 54 percent went on to enroll in the next class, either English 101 or Communications 111."

The ACT requirements for math increased this year.

"We have more enrolled in our developmental math courses than before because of that."

"Overall we're seeing a decrease in transitional students and an increase in developmental students due to the changes in ACT requirements."

"Of those individuals who went on to take the subsequent course 80 percent received a passing grade."

"So it looks like the students who attend these classes, and go on to the next level are successful," Wilkinson said.
