Dorm change reactions vary

By GAIL MAURITZ Staff reporter

Reaction, both pro and con, is building on the proposed changes concerning Laidley and South Halls.

While residents of Laidley Hall are circulating a petition protesting the changes, Athletic Director, Joseph Mc Mullen has said he approves of the proposal to house all athletes in one dormitory.

The petition calls the action an "arbitrary and unfounded" one and states the need for changeshave not been substantiated. According to Michelle South, Charles Town sophomore, more than a hundred of Laidley's 170 residents have signed the opposition statement. Duplicate copies of the petition will presented to MU President, John G Barker and Dr. Richard Mund, vice president of student affairs, requesting an overturning of Myers decision.

Laidley Hall, currently a residence hall for women, will become a men's dorm, Warren S. Myers, director of resident life said, and South Hall, which currently has women living in the west wing of that structure, will have one-half of the building reserved for women. Hodges Hall will become the "athletic" dormitory, according to Myers. Laidley residents are opposed to being moved to South Hall, which they believe is their only alternative if their dorm is converted to house male students, according to Miss South.

They cite security risks, more theft and vandalism and the loss of the "close atmosphere among the women" as opposition to their moving, she said.

Myers, in discussing reasons for the change, said South Hall is now unfair to its female residents and the change to equalize the sexes would allow the programming to be geared to include all the residents. He feels the female minority in South is now being disregarded.

Hodges Hall will house student athletes, but McMullen, is opposed to terming Hodges Hall as an "athletic dorm," although he favors the change.

Terming any dormitory an "athletic dorm", a "horse barn" or a "jock barn" would be a step backwards, McMullen said. The academic averages of MU athletes are above the national average and the athletic department is proud of this fact, he added.

McMullen said he was opposed to segregating the athletes in any dorm, but if the athletes were moved to Hodges Hall, they would comprise only about one-half of the dorm.

With the athletes occupying a maximum of 140 of Hodges' 205 spaces, McMullen said the athletes and the other residents could be mutually benefitted.

Housing the athletes in one dorm would lover the cost of operations during vacations and training periods when other students are not here, he said.

WASHINGTON AP - Alarmed by an epidemic of gonorrhea and syphillis among U.S. youths, the National Commission on Veneral Disease recommended the federal government spend $296 million for VD control the next five years.

Recommendations to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare included teaching public and private school pupils about the diseases no later than the seventh grade, seeking development of effective vaccines, and establishing known controls nationwide to track down undetected cases.

The commission estimated there were 80,000 cases of infectious syphilis and 2.2 illion cases of gonorrhea in the United States last year, but less than 20 per cent

City tacky to gay libbers'-Leitsch

By PAULA ESTEP Assistant News Editor

"I understand that Huntington is a very tacky place to live, especially if you're a homosexual," is the way Dick Leitsch describes the local area.

Leitsch, a prominent spokesman for the "Gay Lib" movement, addressed a group of approximately 100 persons Monday night and opened a series of scheduled events for Human Sexuality Week

Leitsch, who is executive director of the Mattachine Society in New York City, said he has been involved in fighting against legal and social prejudices against homosexuals through the organization.

He explained that a great deal of progress had been made, especially in the larger cities, to eliminate discrimination against horhosexuals.

However, he expressed doubt as to the feasibility of establishing a "Gay Movement" headquarters in Huntington. He said, "We can't set up a place in every town in America the size of Huntington."

Leitsch, who insists that he is a homosexual chauvinist and does not think of women as sex objects, explains that "Gay people want a voice in society, politics and even the churches, and for the first time we are actually getting it." He said that anti-sodomy laws are crumbling and that it "doesn't matter what kind of laws there are, what's important is who is enforcing them and what their attitudes are.' He indicated that attitudes in society have changed and that laws are fast chan ging. He said the American Psychiatric Association (APA) has also changed from "making tremendous profits trying to cure homosexuals to helping the parents adjust to the idea and cope with the situation.'

Leitsch contends that the APA has changed recently due to the fact that homosexuals invaded their last convention.

He could not speculate any particular reason for the development of homosexual identity, but said the main problem was that everyone was trying to find one reason or cause, when there's always more than one.

He also commented on the stereotyping of homosexuals and said, "We're a diverse group, but we have one thing in common and that's our sexual orientation.'

"We're everywhere, but our diversity hurts our movement because it's difficult to organize.'

He also said, "We're an international fraternity based on sex and outcast status, but our basic problem is not in breaking the laws, but merely in trying to cope with the fact that homosexuals are raised in heterosexual families."

"Parents may be liberal when talking about homosexuality, but the liberalism goes out the window when it happens to one of their own children."

Leitsch commented on the allusion that most people associate bars and baths with the gay world. He said people have the mistaken impression that the gay world is nothing but frivolous fun and laughter.

He said, "Homosexuality is a leisure time occupation. We work at our jobs like everyone else, and during our leisure time we like to meet our friends.

"The best place to go is a gathering place, such as a bar or bath.

Greek races launch festivities

By TOM TYGRETT Staff reporter

Greek Week festivities will get under way at 6 p.m. today on Fourth Avenue with qualifying heats for the annual chariot race, according to Tom Nelson, St. Albans junior and director of the event.

"There will be two races ran with the first two in each race qualifying for the finals at 6:30 p.m. Friday", Nelsonsaid.

In the first race starting at 6:30 p.m., will be, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Kappa Alpha, Pi Kappa Alpha and Zeta Beta Tau. In the second race Lambda Chi Alpha, Sigma Phi Epsilon and Tau Kappa Epsilon will compete. Kappa Alpha Psi will not paticipate in the chariot race, but will be competing in the Greek Week events.

In this year's race there will not be points awarded to the winner of the chariot race as in previous years. An ind ividual trophy will presented to the winner of the chariot race and an individual trophy to the Greek Week champions, according to John Snider, Clarksburg junior and Greek Week coordinator.

Action will continue 11 a.m. Saturday at Central Intramural Field (in front of the Science Building) beginning with the Greek events.

First on the list will be the 80 yard-dash starting at 11 a.m. Events will then continue in the following order: water chug, tug-of-war, football throw, crosscountry, second tug-of-war, comedy relay, barrel roll, shuttle relay, shot put, and the final tug-of - war.

Following the afternoon events Saturday, a dance will be held from 8 p.m. to midnight at the Memorial Field House, with music provided by Copper Lake of Morgantown, and Universal Joint, from the Weirton-Wheeling area.

Copper Lake is widely known around West Virginia University because they own their own nightclub in Morgantown.

Universal Joint is also known in the Morgantown area. Both bans play hard rock.

Tickets for the dance are being sold from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. until Friday in the ticket office of the Memorial Student Center. Tickets are $5 per couple.

WASHINGTON AP - Nixon administration officially held its options open yesterday on how to stem North Vietnam's onslaught. It also noted Moscow's arms aid to Hanoi

On neither item, however, did officials at the White House, State Department and Pentagon suggest privately that the United States will go beyond the type of action previously indicated as North Vietnam mounted its offensive across the demilitarized zone

From a military standpoint, the U.S. officials said, it is plain that stepped-up air attacks are the main recourse left for U.S. forces in Vietnam. U.S. ground troops have dwindled to the point where they are no longer available for much combat action. And the U.S. withdrawals will be preceeding, they said.

Publicly, White House press officer Ferald Warren said that President Nixon is keeping all options open on what the Unitesd States might do. The administration's inside crisis unit, named the Washington Special Action Group, met for the second time in two days on the Vietnam situation.

Huntington, W.Va. (AP)- A wildcat strike by telephone operators at the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. here appeared to be nearing a conclusion last night.

A group of the striking operators met Tuesday afternoon and decided to return to work at the midnight shift, according to Joseph Eschelman, public relations supervisor for the company.

Eschelman said there would be negotiations between management and the Communication Workers of America in an effort to get all workers to return to work

The walkout started Monday morning when some 50 operators walked off their jobs.

National rise of cases hasn't overly affected MU

'Venereal disease at Marshall minimal'-Dr. Ha

This is the conclusion of a two part series on veneral disease, one of the nation's leading health problems.

By GILDA WHITE

Special writer

"In my opinion, for a campus the size of Marshall, the number of cases of venereal disease is minimal. Of course, we must realize some students go to private physicans and we do not know about these cases," said Dr. Russell P. Hall of the Marshall University Health Center. According to Dr. Hall, the rapid rise of venereal disease has not affected the campus on a large scale. He does feel, however, that veneral disease is reaching epidemic porportions on the national scale.

'In the '60s venereal disease wasnearlywiped out, but now it is making a very quick, strong comeback. There are many reasons for this, one of which is the fact that young soldiers returning from overseas combat duty are bringing the disease home with them," he said.

Another reason Dr. Hall cited was an immunity of the venereal disease bacteria to drugs. Dr. Hall pointed out some drugs have been used on the disease for so long, the bacteria has built up an immunity to them and they are no longer effective in treatment of VD.

One cause of the rise in venereal disease is the birth control pill. According to Greg Moore, public health disease investigator for the West Virginia Department of Health, in days before the pill, the sexually active male used a contraceptive device to prevent pregnancy. This also helped the prevention of the spread of VD germs. But now that the pill is available to virtually all women, many males no longer use protective devices and are more apt to germ transfer.

"One other reason the pill has caused a rise in VD is that it is responsible for body chemistry changes in women. When taking birth control pills the average body temperature rises and thus provides a more acceptable breeding ground for bacteria," said Moore.

In March of 1971 the American Medical Association Journal published a report that pinpointed one reason for the rise should be credited to private doctors. These doctors, who treat 80 per cent of all venereal disease cases, fail to notify local health authorities of eight cases out of every nine they treat. This means the authorities cannot follow up and track down carriers of the disease

Moore explained that most people do not realize how serious the disease is and are afraid to admit they may have contracted it because of the social stigma attached to it. They are afraid the doctors treating them may turn them in to public health officials, and not knowing how the health department traces venereal disease, are reluctant to seek treatment.

The technique of tracing contacts of a person carrying venereal disease is not only secretive, but essentially important.

"To stop a venereal disease chain is the ultimate goal of any trace. To cure one carrier of venereal disease is important, but useless unless the chain is traced and broken. For example, one person started a chain in New York, which grew to affect over 800 people in 18 different states and in five different nations," said Moore.

He explained that when a person who has been postively diagnosed to have a form of venereal disease gives health officals a list of persons he has had recent sexual contacts with, the officials contact these people in strictest confidence to avoid any embarrassment to them. They are not fold who turned their name over to health officals, but are urged to begin treatment themselves and to give a list of further sexual contacts they may have had. Thus the cycle goes on and on until all people have been reached and treated and the chain is broken.

Treatment for venereal disease is simple. Once it is diagnosed, it can be treated with antibiotics which killthe germs and prevent any serious complications from arising

"Many people believe that penicillin is the only answer to VD, and if they have an allergy to this drug. there is no treatment available to them.

"Treatment for venereal disease has made many advances. No longer to doctors depend strictly upon penicillin for a cure. There are now many drugs on the market for combatting VD. In 1970 a new drug, spectinomycin, was created especially for treatment of venereal disease," said Dr. Hall.

"If any student suspects he has venereal disease or wishes to be examined for it, he should contact the student health center," he continued.

Although medical treatment of VD is a necessity, the most important step in solving the problem is proper education about venereal education for the poeple. "People must and will be made aware of the problem of venereal disease. The federal government has recently granted $60 million for this purpose," said Moore. "Once people know abut it and how to combat it, it will no longer be a threat to them.

East Huntington bridge a major issue

Gubernatorial candidates' views differ on issues

(Editor's note: This is a continuation of articles regarding views of candidates for governor.)

By JOHN WILSON Editor-in-chief

The East Huntington Ohio River Bridge, corrupt politics in West Virginia and pollution are among items guberiorial candidates responded to in The Parthenon questionnaire.

EAST HUNTINGTON BRIDGE

Gubernatorial candidates differ ir opinion over the proposed East Hun-tington Ohio River Bridge with Gov. Arch Hore favoring his suggested site at 30th Freet, Bob Myers favoring Lewis Hollow Jay Rockefeller advocating a bridge but no commitment on a site. Lee Kenna did not answer the question.

Covernor Moore, who suggested the 30th Street site said, "The site which we selected is in my judgment the best, the most feasible and the most economical ecation for this span. It will also be the least disruptive in relocating residents and is compatible with the bond elution providing these funds. This site does not destroy a single dwelling in the historic Guyandotte section. Our engineers were directed to particularly design this bridge with every consideration being given the environmental impact on this area."

However, Democratic candidate Bob Myers said he totally disagrees with the Moore idea. Myers said, "The bridge should be constructed at the Lewis Hollow site with a connector to I-64. A Democratic administration and the present administration have both ignored the desires of Huntington on this bridge location. If elected governor this bridge will be built at Lewis Hollow." Democrat John D. Rockefeller said, 'The people of Huntington have lived with unkept promises for far too many years. If I am elected governor, a site will be selected early in my administration, and the building program will begin. I would listen most carefully to the community leaders on this matter of such importance to Huntington. Without access to all of the engineering studies that have been made, however, it is difficult to arrive at a decision as to which site is best.'

CORRUPT POLITICS?

Gubernatorial hopefuls disagree over whether West Virginia still has a reputation for corrupt politics. Moore and Rockefeller said they feel that reputation is declining while Kenna and Myers said they believe it is still present.

Rockefeller said, "That reputation is declining, and I am convinced positive steps are being taken to eliminate corruption in politics. The Democratic Party, particularly, is in a re-building process, and is ready to meet its responsibilities in the 1970s.

Governor Moore said, "I do not feel the State of West Virginia suffers any longer from the stain of corrupt government.

Pointing out that his administration has been free from the corruption and machine politics, the Governor said, "I feel that my candidacy is perhaps a firm indication of my trust in the men and women-Republicans and Democratswho are servants of the people of West Virginia. So few people realize that a strong two-party system is our best safeguard against the wretched excesses and corruptions which have tainted the politics of the past.

'West Virginia has not had this, and West Vriginia has suffered severely because of one-party dominance where nominations were tantamount to elections to office. It is my hope that our political system has matured enough so that we can now have viable candidates from each political party who offer constructive programs for the improvement of our State.

'The voters of West Virginia are increasingly voting for the man rather than the party, for the program rather than the dogma, and I feel encouraged that this type of issue-oriented campaign, significantly minus underhanded personal attacks, is the best evidence that we as a people have achieved political maturity," concluded Moore.

On the other hand, Kenna said, "West Virginia does still have a reputation for corrupt politics. An honest state administration can go a long way toward correcting this image, however.

Myers said West Virginia "certainly" has a reputation for its politics, "but so do a number of other states. Unfotunately, ours has sent to prison an exgovernor which has tended to emphasize our problem."

'Before correction can be achieved the problem must be delineated. West Virginia's problems have resulted from political bossism-from one-man rule. Because the Democratic state poltical machine was under the domination of Barron all types of excessives were permitted. You see, whenever government is corrupt, the cause can be attributed only to the people who fail to live up to their political responsibilitities and do not make an effort to examine the candidates," said Myers.

He continued citing the importanceof voting in primary elections when voters have a chance to "nominate good people." "I really do not have an answer to the problem. The answer must come from the voters.'

POLLUTION

Candidates were asked "What legislation, if any, do you support for control of pollution?"

Kenna said, "I favor a central pollution control agency at the state level which would have direct responsibility for water, air and surface pollution. Strict enforcement and an extensive anti-litter campaign along with an executive mandate should show a marked improvement in our pollution problems." Said Myers, "We have the legislation in many instances. Why not start enforcing it? If , for example, laws pertaining to surface mining were being enforced, abolition would not now be an issue!

Rockefeller said he favors consolidation into one agency of those administrative bodies having jurisdiction over the problems of air pollution, waterpollution and disturbance of the land. "This would be coupled with tough enforcement of all environmental laws, and new laws where needed."

Governor Moore said, "I am most interested in making a concerted attack upon all environmental problems in the Mountain State, and this is why I have called for the creation of a Enviornmental Protection Department for the State of West Virginia to coordinate all efforts in alleviating the adverse effects of pollution, strip mining, etc.

"You might be surprised to know that West Virginia, under its new air pollution regulations, has one of the toughest regulatory systems in the nation combatting this problem. Again, this is not a problem that arose overnight nor is it a problem that will eliminated overnight, but I believe we are making headway and I will continue to devote every effort to restoring our environment and eliminating any pollution problems

International education council to hold conference at Marshall

BY NIKKI HUMRICHOUSER Assistant news editor

Regional Council for International cation (RICE) will hold its Thirth Annual Conference here April 14 and 15, according to Dr. A. Mervin Tysen, Marshall's liaison to the council. Over 150 foreign and American students and faculty from 33 RCIE mber schools located in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia are expected attend, he said.

Objective of the Council is to offer Indents an opportunity for exposure to foreign cultures and studies.

"For many college students, exposure to a foreign culture can be the most valuable single experience in their intellectual and personal development," according to information from Dr. Tyson.

Purpose of the conference is to bring foreign students and faculty and Americans together to discuss and improve these programs, he said.

An address at 10 a.m. April 14 by RCIE President Shepherd L. Witman, Creative Responses to the Challenges of nal Education by the RCIE" will open the conference. President John G. Barker will also speak.

All functions of the conference will take ce in Memorial Student Center, Dr. Tyson said

A panel discussion on "Creativity in tional Education" will be headed Dr. Howard Wilson of Capital verally at 11:50 a.m. m the Alm

"Potentialities of Cross-Registration in RCIE" will be conducted by Erno Dahl of Wittenberg University. Wittenberg is presently sponsoring a program in East Asian Studies. Students from RCIE member institutions can enroll in the program and take courses in Chinese and Japanese languages, history, art, novels, geography, government and religion. This is a pilot program. Purpose of the panel discussion is to discuss possibilities of developing similar courses of study in other RCIE schools, he said.

Two other discussions are "Faculty Enrichment Programs" headed by Thomas Knipp of Kent State University and "Short Term Student International Education Programs" conducted by Barrie Richardson, of Bethany College.

"International Education, the College, and the Community" directed by Shepherd Witman will be topic for a discussion at 4 p.m. Former Marshall student Leslie Flowers, who spent a year in Basel, Switzerland, on an RCIE program, will be a panel member.

Discussions on "Innovations in Undergraduate Teaching" chairmen by Eugene Swanger of Wittenberg University and "New Ventures in Teacher Education" directed by Harold Vayhinger of Ohio Northern University will also be conducted at 4 p.m.

Wing-Tsit Chan, Gillespie professor of philosophy at Chatham College in Pennsylvania will address the whole group at 8 p.m., speaking about the reative Role of Religion and Philosophy

Discussions on April 15, will be organized and led by students.

Marshall's foreign students K. Soman of Singapore, Gordon Mtetiva of Rhodesia and Djohan Surya of Thailand will lead a panel discussion on "Choice and Selection of Study Abroad by Foreign Students," explaining how and why they chose to come to Marshall. Also on the panel is Birgitta Holmberg, from Sweden, now attending Westminster College.

K. Soman will also speak about "International Students as an Educational Resource, and What They Can Contribute to the Campus Where They Are," according to Dr. Tyson.

Special registration rates have been granted for Marshall students and faculty attending the convention. Marshall student rate is $2 and faculty rate is $4, he said.

Spring meetings of the RCIE Board of Directors and RCIE executive committee will be held Thursday at the Uptowner Inn, according to Dr. Tyson.

Regional Council spsonsors programs in Basel, Switzerland, and Verona, Italy, lasting a year. They also sponsor a summer session in Japan and short-term courses in Mexico.

All students are eligible for the RCIE sponsored programs although RCIE membership-school students will be given first consideration, according to information from Dr. Tyson. Deadline for receipt of application is April 15.

Brando 'stunning' in 'The Godfather'

By TONY RUTHERFORD Staff reporter

A list of unrivaled masters of screen gangster characterizations would include James Cagney, Humphrey Bogart and Edward G. Robinson. Now a new name....Marlon Brando.

Brando's name is added to the list of outstanding gangster actors on the basis of his memorable, if not stunning, performance in "The Godfather." In the film Brando plays Don Vito, the head of the Mafia. The performance should net Brando a "best actor" nomination and immortalize his name in cinema history Brando's portrayal of the Mafia leader is very humanistic. Not only are the vile aspects of Vito's character brought out, but Vito's hopes, fears, sorrows and compassions are also vividily detailed.

In addition, Brando has mastered to perfection the slurry, mumblish style of speech required for the Godfather role. The low, throaty voice used by Brando is nothing short of superb.

Brando gives a controlled performance. Feelings are shown not by excessive emotionalism but by facial expressions, vocal tones and gestures. For example, when his elder son is murdered by a rival gang. Brando does not over-react. Instead, he takes the body to an undertaker who owes him a favor. Brando asks the undertaker to do his best work fixing up the body because he "doesn't want the boy's mother to

There are two peaks in Brando's performance. The first occurs when Brando learns his younger son, Michael (the son he wanted to go straight), is in hiding after killing two people. The other highlight is the compassion and grief Brando displays when learning of the

It's a shame the script called for Vito to be seriously wounded thus taking Brando off the screen for about 45 minutes of the picture. Even with a number of fine performances by such stars as Al Pacino and John Marley, "The Godfather" is still Brando's picture. Getting away from Brando's performance, the film itself is a type of gangster epic-it runs two minutes short of three hours. Some critics have called "The Godfather" the "Gone With the Wind" of gangster

"Gone With the Wind in another way. While "Gone With the Wind"

depicted the changing life style of the South during the Civil War era, 'The Godfather'' shows how the Corleone family shifted from purely illegal activities and interests to the takeover of legitimate business in order to gain more respectability for the family

As might be expected there are a number of violent scenes in "The Godfather." But one really wants more. The suspense and tension of the film has the viewers twisting and turning in their seats anxiously awaiting another showdown between the warring gangsters. Mood in "The Godfather" is set by the dark toned photography. Cinematographer Gordon Willis has used just the right amount of color to give settings an authentic fortish appearance. In addition mood is further developed by the use of various pop musical tunes of the period. The first week of "The Godfather" at the Camelot and Mid-Town Cinema I theaters has been a near sell-out. One student as he was about to view the film remarked, "I'm so close to the screen I might even get shot."

But crowds or not if you don't go see "The Godfather," you will have missed a milestone in modern film history.

Laidley Hall residents protest dorm changeover

To the Editor:

"I think it is sad because Laidley is my home and we are a family here."

"It makes me furious because those guys get everything they want and I'm getting tired of catering to the athletic department.'

Statements like these are being muttered and hollered through the halls of Laidley since its residents were advised Monday that the football players are moving in next year.

Why am I so against the change? There are several reasons.

First of all, Laidley Hall was the first women's dormitory on this campus. It was founded in 1937 and named for John Laidley, founder of Marshall. Perhaps I am superstitious, but I hate to break tradition.

Since it was founded in 1937, it is obviously old. But its age has mellowed it and given it a charm which all other dorms lack. It isn't like a hotel; it is like a home.

South Hall was built in 1961 and completed in 1968 and it is already a wreck. As far as I can decipher from the opinions I have heard, Laidley women do not want to leave "home" and move into a "super-jocks playground."

Leaving out the sentimental values of thesituation, practicality also must be installed as a vice for argument.

"Boys will be boys." They tend to be rough. Afterall, tearing phones from the walls is not what one could call "gentle". Laidley Hall is too fragile for that kind of treatment. It's age has weakened it and the women there realize it must be handled with "tender loving care."

What's wrong with the situation as it stand now? After all, I tend to believe there are more important items to be taken care of first. Medical school? New health center facilities? What happened to these important issues?

Perhaps the University should initiate programs one at a time and carry through with them. Instead, the students hear dozens of plans and see no action. But for once, I would like to see this plan not be acted upon

To the Editor:

As a resident of Laidley Hall, I protest the short-sighted action of the Housing Office in its game of musical dorms. Those in charge did not consider the feelings of the residents about being pushed out of their over-priced dorm. Laidley decision 'arbitrary, unprecedented'

LAIDLEY HALL, opened in 1937, is a residence hall for women. It is named in honor of the University's founder, John Laidley.

Marshall University catalogue

The above statements, just two sentences buried in the myriad of information available in the University catalogue, say more than is apparent from a superficial reading.

First, it says it's a WOMEN'S dorsecond, that it's been a mitory. WOMEN'S dormitory for 35 years, and third, that its builders, the students, and the administration in 1937 were proud enough of the building to name it after the founder of the University.

Now, however, through the grace and benevolence of Warren Myers, dean of residence life, all this is to be changed.

Myers has dreamed up a cure for all the ills of MU dorms. To solve the problems he intends to take the football players out of South Hall, which has been plagued several years by vandalism of various sorts. These will be placed, so the plans go, in Hodges Hall, where the basketball players now live.

Myers is said to want to make almost half of South's residents women, thus he hopes cutting down on the problems that dorm has been having.

A harmless change, one might say, but there is a fly in Myers' cure-all ointment. Myers apparently hasn't thought of the trouble and disappointment to be caused by such action.

First, women of Laidley, who like the dorm, even with its bad plumbing and lack of facilities comparable with other dormes, are extremely upset over this arbitrary action. No one bothered to ask THEM anything about taking over the dorm that had been theirs for years.

Some of them have been consulting with members of Civil Liberties Unions and even wrote to Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., a somewhat "militant" women's rights leader.

Michelle South, Charles Town sophomore and resident of Laidley for the past two years, commented "What could be more male chauvinistic? Two or three men are trying to take over a dorm with more than 150 women to put in more men.

"We'd be willing to compromise," Miss South adds, "It wouldn't be so bad, if they need to, to have Laidley a coed dorm. But if Myers thinks we'll quietly move out of OUR dorm without even a protest, he's wrong.

Anyway, apart from Women's Lib and students' civil liberties, Myers is making a mistake in this situation.

While he should, however grudgingly, be given credit for trying to remedy the discipline problems and the situations with the furnishings in South Hall, he is going about it the wrong way.

Four-um is a column of comment

written by the four The Parthenon news

Myers has completely ignored the feelings of all students involved. Not only are there the women of Laidley, there are the men of South, some of whom might conceivably have to leave their rooms to give room to displaced Laidley women.

What man would want to live in Laidley with 35 years of women's memorabilia left over? Some of the red hearts painted on the wall and pictures of kittens and puppies playing in the grass MIGHT be difficult to remove from walls. It would be comical to see a six-foot tall man in a room with pink walls.

What man wants to live in rooms with these? None I have known.

As for this being the answer to Housing Office problems with vandalism-it most definitely is not.

Just because someone's residence is changed that doesn't guarantee there will be no trouble. People who want trouble generally find it. And if students aren't mature enough to preserve one dormitory intact, what makes Myers feel another will be treated any better .?

Even though the basketball team has done no damage to Hodges, that poor dorm will have other residents now, and indications seem to point that Hodges will go in the same direction as wrecked, defiled South Hall.

Another consideration is the cost of renovating the dorms. Laidley was never intended for use as a men's dorm AND consequently is not so strong as Hodges or Twin Towers East.

Also, changes would have to made in the plumbing and bathroom facilities-a completely unnecessary cost to taxpayers. Instead of authorizing changes on each floor of two dormitories, why not just leave Laidley alone and change floors in South when more spaces are needed for women?

Myers said that decision was necessary, but he has failed to substantiate his claims in any way. He has given no valid reasons for this sudden, unexpected and drastic move.

On this basis, the students involved should do everthing possible to have this arbitrary and unprecedented decision rescinded.

Such action might have been tolerated in the 1950's, but there is no reason students should unquestioningly accept it now.

Lee decides: not MU

The first annual Pizza Hut Classic will be played April 15 in Las Vegas, Nev. Proceeds from the first year's classic will be shared by Wichita State University, Marshall University, Sacred Heart College and U.S. Olympic Committee, according to Pizza Hut President Frank Carney

The game will be played in the Las Vegas Convention Center, and MU senior Russ Lee has been one of the top vote-getters on the East Squad. But, don't look for Lee in the line-up...he won't be there.

Instead, the "Boston Bomber" is going to play in the All-American Coaches Senior Classic All-Star Basketball Game on April 18. Coincidentally the "Coaches Classic" will also be played in Las V⁻ gas in the Las Vegas Convention Center.

So w y doesn't Lee play in both, since they are both in the same city as 1 building? Because he can't.

You see, the "coaches classic", which is sponsored by the National Association of Basketball Coaches, exercises exclusive rights over its participants.

In other words, if a ballplayer is going to play in the "Coaches Classic" he isn't going to play in the Pizza Hut Classic.

So why doesn't Lee play in the Pizza Hut Classic instead of the "Coaches Classic"? Because the "Coaches Classic" is more prestigious. For one thing, it will be nationally televised. For another, the NBA coaches have a habit of watching it closely.

Some people may say that Lee should play in the Pizza Hut details? Classic to represent Marshall. And that it will look bad on Marshall's part to have a player turn down the chance to play in a game where a piece of the gate goes to Marshall.

This argument is unjustified. Playing in post season tournaments is and should be up to the individual player's discretion. Marshall University, much less Russ Lee, has no oblication to the

Pizza Hut Classic.

No more baseball?

Guess what? Today was to be the opening day of baseball season. But it's not. Instead, the strike continues as Marvin Miller, head honcho of the Player's Association, should be starting to make the owners sweat.

At the same time, the ball players are becoming more and more tarnished in they eyes of the public. Most people seem to feel the players are being greedy. So, for reference material you turn to your trusty copy of "Ball Four" to see what out-spoken ball player, turned author, turned ball player, Jim Bouton has to say about Marvin Miller and the owners.

This is what he wrote in "Ball Four"

"We got to talking about Marvin Miller. There had been, by the way, a concerted effort to stop the players from hiring Miller. The St. Louis players were told by the front office, for example, that of all the candidates for the job Miller would be the worst choice. They voted for him unamimously.

Then there's this. Soon after Miller was elected to run the Player's Association, Joe Cronin, president of the American League, put his arm around him and said, very earnestly, "Young man (Marvin is 49) I've been in this game a long time now and I've learned something that I want you to think about. Players come and players go, but owners will be here forever, and don't forget Locker (relief pitcher Bob Locker) said he understood very well why the owners get so mad at Miller. He said it was because Miller never lets up. "If he has a point he jumps on them with both feet and never gets off," Locker said.

I couldn't help saying that was fine with me. I told Locker that Miller isn't doing any more than any lawyer would do in the same situation. And that the problem was not Miller, but the owners, who were so used to having things their way, getting away with technicalities, pushing things on us, that they were now affronted when all Miller was doing was his job.

Pag (catcher Jim Pagliaroni) also said he nurses a grudge against Bowie Kuhn, our new commissioner. He remembers when Kuhn was the owner's rep and when we submitted a proposal to rais the minimum salary from $7,000 to $10,000; he waited six months before he answered. And then it was at a meeting and what he said was, 'Oh, yes, we've heard something about that. Just what are the

Okay, so he was the owners' Marvin Miller. Now I'm glad we got one

If Jim Bouton likes Mill, can the man be all bad.?

Since today was opening day, you can expect the negotiations to intensify. Before, all the players were losing was spring training expense money. But once the season starts, they start losing pay. But then again, once the season starts the owners start losing gate receipts

But one thing's certain. The owners better worry about the fan's interest. If a fan finds out he can live without seeing a baseball game for a month, maybe he'll decide he can do without for a year, and then forever

Should vour first car be a used car?

Most young people buying a car for the first time automatically think of a used car.

It's understandable. The way new cars cost these days. But it's too bad. Because most first-timers don't know too much about it. And if ever a person needed to know the ins and outs of cars it's when he buys a used one. Or he could end up buying somebody else's headache.

The answer is a new car that you can afford.

A Honda Sedan.

It costs less than a lot of used cars, gets up to 40 miles to the gallon, and is covered by a one year/12,000-mile warranty.

So, instead of a used car, maybe your first car should be an unused car. A new Honda.

'Students more serious now' Center director recalls the past

By SONDRA JARRELL Feature writer

"Students are more serious now than they were in the past," at least that's what W. Don Morris, manager of Memorial Student Center, says. Students of the past were more carefree, said Morris, explaining that with the coming of the automobile and television they became more serious. "They seem to be more concerned with their education," he continued. "I guess it's because they realize it's almost impossible to get a job today without an education.'

Students of the past were concerned more with their dress than students today, Morris said. "Most of the kids that come into the union don't seem to feel dress is their main concern," he added.

Morris said he has made most of his conclusions about students by observing those who have passed through the halls of the old student union and the new student center.

Morris said he feels the old union had its own charm, and was used to the maximum.

"Sometimes it was so crowded a person could hardly get into the door," he commented. "Many times students were sitting on each other's laps and were three deep in the aisles. laughed.

"Years back we used to have mixes every Monday night," Morris continued. "The "The students couldn't get inside because it was so crowded. They had to wait until one person left and then squeeze their bodies in the vacant space. "Later we changed the time to Wednesday nights. In the

He commented that the students of today would rather listen to music than dance to it. He also mentioned the Coffee House is rarely used.

"Of course we would put up a sign to tell the students they would not be buying real coke, but they drank it anyway with little complaint," he continued.

After the war was over the population of the student body jumped by 3,000. Because of the GI Bill there was a great influx of men on campus. "The girls didn't seem to mind a bit," he laughed.

Marshall in 1945 as the manager of the union, he was a boy-scout executive. That was how he met John D. Williams, then president of Marshall.

'It was quite a change from boy scout executive to student union manager," he said. "But Marshall had only 1100 students so it wasn't bad."

When considering students and what they have made of themselves, Morris recalls that many have become doctors, lawyers, politicians and teachers.

"Almost anywhere I go there are people I know," he said. "Usually all I have to do is walk down a street and I run into a former graduate."

Students of the past and present have occupied Morris' life. Of the students today he says, "They're not Princeton or Harvard, but they are some of the friendliest people I have ever known."

A Colombian scholar is visiting Marshall this week to help students learn about the history and lives of the people of Latin America

Armando Nosra, professor of history at the University of Greater Colombia in Bogota, Colombia, is lecturing in several classes about the misconceptions the Americans and Latin Americans have about one another

"Most Latin Americans think all Americans are millioniares," said Nosra, "and most Americans believe Latins to be poor. Many of these ideas came about through movies, but movie life is often entirely different from real life.'

Nosra will visit Spanish - American literature, social studies, and political science classes to have informal discussions on the history of Latin American countries, especially Brazil, Colombia, Cuba and Mexico

"I usually begin these discussions with a brief quiz," said Nosra, 'by asking students to write five adjectives that they feel would describe 'Latin America.' Frequently, students describe a city in Mexico as being typical of all Latin America, while this is not true. For instance, 'spicy foods' are usually thought of in connection with the Latin countries."

The Colombian scholar, who visited many areas of the United States, says he feels West Virginians are the friendliest. "The people here are so anxious to be helpful," he said, "while the people in some areas seem so questioning. I appreciate such friendliness here.'

Would you like to choose the textbook for one of your of the text was that the gramclasses? If you are a second mar explanations were exyear Spanish student, you can plainedinEnglish. Students also do just that.

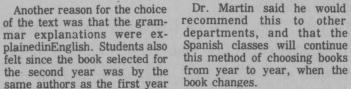

Dr. John L. Martin, chairman of the Department of Modern Languages, says he feels the program has worked out beautifully.

In an article written by Dr. Martin and published in the February issue of the "West Virginia School Journal," he explained that at the end of the last school year, in every class of the second semester of first year Spanish students, a class period was devoted to passing two books around the class. Having an open discussion of their merits and defects, a vote was taken at the conclusion of the period.

"Mastering Spanish," by Turk and Espinosa was the text chosen by the students instead of "El Espanol," by Bourne, Silman and Sobrino, according to Dr. Martin.

"When the members of the teaching staff learned the decision of the students and considered the reasons behind the decision, we all agreed that the choice was a wise one," added Dr. Martin.

The students had several reasons for the text they chose, one being that it began with a thorough review of what was learned in the first year of Spanish. They felt the vocabulary in "Mastering Spanish" was useful and practical, and the appendix was thorough, with Spanish-English and English-Spanish vocabularies, according to Dr. Martin.

book changes. text, that this would assure a "I feel the text is economical familiar format and continutive because it can be used for the entire second year, and this is an advantage," said Dr. Martin. He explained that the covers everything book required for the second year and grammar and reading texts do not have to be purchased.

As of now, the French and German classes have not adopted this system, according to Dr. Martin.
