Huntington's night employees
They meet some 'weird' people

BY JIM WARE
News editor

There are people in Huntington who stay out all night, drag home at 8 a.m. and get paid for it.

Mrs. Margie Carter, an employe of the Kroger Co. Store 167 at Huntington, east of the city on U.S. Route 60, is one of those night people.

"You always have weird ones (customers), every night," Mrs. Carter said when she was approached by this writer at 1:30 a.m. recently.

"The weirdest, I'd say, were these two boys who came in here dressed in jeans with knives stuck down in their boots," she said, adding that later she found out the boys were on their way to go horseback riding.

"I never knew there were so many weirdos around," she said.

Mrs. Carter told of one group of people who came into the store and attempted to distract her while a member of the group prepared to steal her purse.

When she spotted the would-be-thief, Mrs. Carter said she ran after him and he dropped the purse in the store's parking lot.

"Weird people don't seem to come out till night," she said.

"You really don't get too scared because the police usually come up at night-sometimes they sit in the parking lot. One time we had more than seven in here," the attractive young clerk said.

"I really look for us to get robbed one of these nights," she said, adding: "There's been quite a bit of stuff stolen."

Mrs. Carter said most people come into the store during the wee hours for snacks, but said also, "They buy everything in the middle of the night."

She said some nights the store has about 500 customers between 11 p.m. and 8 a.m., the hours of her working day.

"Some people work shifts; some are going somewhere. Usually, I ask them," she said.

Mrs. Carter, one of two people in the store at night, said she performs several different tasks, including stock work and cashiering.

When the sun comes up, Mrs. Carter said sometimes she doesn't go to sleep, but if she does, it's usually for about five hours after 3 p.m.

"It was hard getting used to it," she said, adding that she now would find it difficult to return to a daytime schedule.

A little bit closer to the heart of Huntington, at the Mister Donut of Huntington Inc., located at 2505 Fifth Ave., Mrs. Etta Rowsey starts her day at midnight, an hour after Mrs. Carter.

Mrs. Rowsey, who has been with the Mister Donut pastry shop two years, said "you get a mixture of customers" and added that the shop served quite a few truck drivers during the night.

Customers at Mister Donut aren't always consistent with their purchases, according to Mrs. Rowsey: "Well, it varies...one night you'll sell a lot of donuts and one night you'll sell a lot of coffee."

Early risers and light breakfast-eaters pour into the shop in the pre-dawn hours the middle-aged waitress said.

"We have a lot of 'em just for donuts and coffee. If we fixed a regular breakfast, we couldn't handle 'em," she said, pointing out that the shop is not equipped to prepare complete breakfasts.

"If you sleep, you sleep in the daytime!" she said.

"My best time is in the morning. And then, sometimes, I take a little nap in the evening," Mrs. Rowsey added.

Robberies have been scarce at Mister Donut, according to Mrs. Rowsey, who said she didn't know "whether we're lucky or paying the preacher or what."

Mrs. Carter and Mrs. Rowsey are members of that necessary, but forgotten segment of workers—the night people. People who are there when you need them, but usually go unnoticed in their nightly labors.

Carnival slated for state patients

A carnival for the benefit of patients at Huntington State Hospital will be held Oct. 18 at Unit #1 parking lot.

The carnival, to be held from 1:30-3:30 p.m., is an annual project which is considered "the climax of the summer program," according to Roy Frasher, director of recreation and coordinator of the carnival.

"The carnival has been very successful in the past," said Frasher. "We have several groups which have volunteered their time and gifts," he said.

Gifts donated for the project are used as prizes given at the various booths. According to Frasher, there will be 20 booths constructed by the maintenance department. These booths will include such games as the penny toss, bean bag throw, basketball toss and record break. Other activities will include dunking for apples, weight guessing, kissing booth and cake walk.

The community-hospital project is set up "strictly to benefit the patients," according to Mrs. Kathy Murphy, coordinator of volunteer services at the State Hospital.

She said that "will there be no money involved at the carnival. Tickets will be distributed to the patients for their use."

A carnival ball will also be held Thursday evening and the election of a king and queen by nomination will be included as part of the festivities. Music will be provided by a local rock group.

Food and refreshments will be provided by the hospital staff and donations from private individuals and organizations,

SDX membership provides protection

"Membership in Sigma Delta Chi is better than a bail bondsman," Dr. Deryl R. Leaming, chairman of the Department of Journalism, told SDX members and prospective members last Thursday.

Dr. Leaming talked about the protective role SDX (professional journalism society) played as he reported civil rights incidents in the early 1960's.

As a professional member in SDX, Dr. Leaming said the organization has helped him to know professionals in other cities.

He said SDX has been extremely active in promoting the legislation of national shield laws and helping reporters gain admittance to courts of law.

Miss Ann M. Berry, SDX president, said that her membership has helped her make job contacts and meet professionals in the media. She also said receiving Quill Magazine is major benefit of membership.

She invited sophomore, junior and senior journalism majors to join the national SDX chapter and said freshmen may become associate members of MU's chapter.

European community display showing recent achievements

European Community? Is that a small town in France? Isn't its real name the Common Market?

A closer look at the European Community display in the lobby of Smith Hall and a study of the literature available will tell you that it is not a small town anywhere and it is an offshoot of the Common Market, whose real name is the European Economic Community.

The display is an attempt by the European Community Information Service to tell Americans what has happened to the Common Market idea in the last year, according to Dr. Clair W. Matz Jr., assistant professor of political science.

A map showing the member nations and brief explanations of the aims, achievements and workings of the European Community are included in the display. There are also graphs showing area, population and gross national product of members, along with a graph showing the community's relationship with the U.S.

State prime plant candidate

WASHINGTON—West Virginia ranks high as a prime candidate for a coal gasification plant," Congressman Ken Hechler announced Friday.

"The U.S. Office of Coal Research has informed me that West Virginia, with its ample coal reserves and water supply, is in an excellent position to have such a plant located within its borders," Representative Hechler said.

The Federal agency has teamed up with private industry to develop a practical way to convert the nation's huge coal reserves into gas to meet energy demands.

Congressman's Hechler's announcement comes on the heels of Congressional action last week to vote additional funds for both coal gasification and liquefaction.

Hechler's remarks drew praise from Carl Bagge, president of the National Coal Association.

Acting Director George Fumich Jr. of the U.S. Office of Coal Research, in response to a Hechler request that a coal
