Holliday said that recruiting is set up to continue being a success.

“We’re working towards the same goal,” Holliday said. “We help them when we can and they help us so we certainly need each other.”

There are many obstacles to overcome in recruiting. Holliday has gained support from President Stephen J. Kopp and the understanding that this playing field needs to be set up for the participating students. Holliday said removing the restrictions from the playing field is a top priority and it is in his job to find positive outlets for students to participate in. Milt Bohs, president of the Marshall University Student Athlete Advisory Committee, says his team has had many difficulties playing on the field. He said, “We had one game on the field after bad weather. The field was flooded. Students just couldn’t find the playing surface. It was very un even making it even more possible for players to have their losses and injuries.”

The renowned theater and dance company, Troika Ranch Friday, Saturday and Sunday, at the Center for African American Studies at Marshall, will perform its latest offering with "SWARM" at the Birke Fine Arts Fest. The Birke Fine Arts Fest Wednesday through Saturday at 7 p.m. in the Joan C. Edwards Playhouse is known for its artistic platform for world-renowned artists and contemporary art. The concert will be available to Marshall students and faculty, who will also perform in the piece.

"The Birke Fine Arts Fest provides us with the opportunity to expand how the arts are engaging to audiences," said festival coordinator Nicole Perrone. "It will be unlike anything they’ve ever seen; and we hope for the audience to dissolve their preconceived notions of how the arts exist too."

The event costs $7 for students and $15 for adults. Tickets can be purchased at the door or prior to the event online at marshall.edu.

Twitter Inc. beat Wall Street’s expectations Wednesday by reporting a hefty boost in advertising sales for the final quarter of 2013, but it showed relatively slow gains in its user base.

In the company’s first earnings report since a successful stock market debut last fall, the popular microblogging service said it had a net loss of $511 million on revenue of $243 million for the quarter, compared to a loss of $8.7 million on sales of $112 million in the same period of last year.

Earnings for the fourth quarter amounted to a loss of $1.41 a share, or a gain of 2 cents a share after excluding one-time charges. Analysts surveyed by Thomson Reuters were expecting Twitter to report a loss of 40 cents a share for the quarter, or a loss of 2 cents a share after excluding one-time charges, on revenues of $121 million.

An earnings loss isn’t surprising, since young companies traditionally spend heavily on expanding their infrastructure and granting stock options to new employees. Wall Street is much more focused on Twitter’s revenue, which is fueled primarily from sales of mobile ads and was expected to nearly double from the $111 million Twitter reported for the same period a year earlier.

But analysts were also watching to see how much Twitter’s user base has grown from the 230 million mobile monthly active users it reported last fall. Twitter’s growth rate had slowed from 20 percent in the third quarter of 2013 to 7 percent in the second quarter and 6 percent in the third.

New strain of avian influenza found in poultry

The researchers hypothesized that an as-yet-uncharacterized avian flu virus was not circulating in the wild, and used a reverse genetics approach to demonstrate that this strain was capable of infection in the mouse. They then tested the effectiveness of vaccines against this strain, and found that the vaccines were effective in preventing disease in the mice. This suggests that vaccines against this new strain of avian influenza may be effective in protecting against this strain in humans as well.
