Of The Dell releases debut single

By NATHAN THOMAS THE PARTHENON

Huntington rock quartet Of The Dell has released its debut single “Run ‘n’ Good Times,” consisting of two of the band’s songs that have been together since early 2015. “We just want it raw to sound like it’s my first Assassin of Silence album," said Jim Curnutte, producer of the band’s debut album, The Heart Association. “It’s been an experience so far to work with these two songs, especially ‘Run,’ but I wanted it to be interpreted in the production of the album.”

The band met Curnutte in early 2015 at Epicenter Studios in Elkins. Curnutte immediately hit it off with Curnutte because of his interest in Curnutte’s connection with electric guitar. Curnutte is known for his work with several local acts including Ascension of St. Luke and JC Storyteller.

“The best part of our original music,” Curnutte said. “It’s been an experience so far to work on the single,” Curnutte said. “Basically we work wherever we’ve been there to do it because it’s important to have that connection. The last couple of months have been really chaotic which has helped us with these two songs, especially ‘Run’ because of the chaos that is trying to be interpreted in the production of the album.”

Curnutte plans to release his Assassin of Silence album later this year, while also working on the full-length Of The Dell album. Of The Dell has multiple original songs. Of The Dell has multiple original songs. The trend has received a lot of positive feedback from the Huntington community for several years.

Senior communication studies major Mary Maynard is competing in Miss Jetset 2015. If Maynard wins, she will be awarded $100,000 and fly out to Arizona to compete in Miss Jetset 2015.

Maynard wants to use her title as Miss Jetset 2015 to help children compete in Miss Jetset 2015 and put a positive message out to the world that they can compete in Miss Jetset 2015. “I’m going to be in Miss Jetset Magazine, regardless if I win or not,” Maynard said. “But now I have a platform to use to win the title of Miss Jetset, which will represent West Virginia and in the Japanese magazine, Cosmode Magazine.”

Maynard’s reasons for donating to those organizations are personal. “I’m a huge animal advocate,” Maynard said. “I have always loved animals and want to do anything I can to help them. The American Heart Association is something that hits home, as my grandmother died with heart problems and she was like a second mom to me. I know a lot of people that have suffered from heart conditions and I work with the Heart Association at my local school, educating kids and doing fundraisers for them.”

Marshals cruises to win in exhibition opener

Joe Holliday wasn't the only one feeling a sense of deja vu Friday night. Austin Lewis was also drawn back to the old days of college football.

Austin Lewis is set to make his collegiate debut Friday night when the Herd hosts Newberry College at 3:30 p.m. at Joan C. Edwards Stadium. Lewis, a redshirt-sophomore wide receiver, was released from the team in late November 2014 by then-Herd head coach Doc Holliday.

Although Lewis’ time at Marshall is only one season long, he has a sense of familiarity with the program. ’The guy is a pro, he does everything right and to be able to see him get that call out of a little league coach means the world to me. I’m so glad for him because it says so much about him. The dream is to make it big in the big leagues, so for anyone to be able to achieve that it’s great,” said Lewis.

Holliday was the coach who led Marshall to a victory over the Gamecocks in 2011, and Lewis led the teams to a victory in 2013.

“I swear, it’s like watching a flashback of my senior year at Joan C. Edwards Stadium,” Holliday said.

Lewis appears to have the same type of skill as a wide receiver that Holliday had during his college career. Holliday said that he has the speed, size and athletic ability to make an impact in the Marshall offense.

“I think he’s very athletic and he’s got a lot of upside,” Holliday said. “He’s a good route runner and he’s got a lot of speed. He has a good grasp on what’s going on in the offense and he’s gotten a lot of reps in practice.”

Lewis said he is excited to be back in the area and to be a part of a program he knows.

“I’m just excited to be back in Huntington,” Lewis said. “I love the area and I’m just excited to be back out there on the field.”

Lewis said he is excited to be back out on the field because he has missed so much time due to injuries.

“I’ve been out for quite a while with some injuries and just being back out there is great,” Lewis said.

Lewis said he is looking forward to the opportunity to play in a game for the first time since his high school days.

“I’m just excited to have the opportunity to play in a game again after being out for so long,” Lewis said.

Herd football team manager Eugene Jones, 18, holding his head in his hands during the memorial ceremony.

"It was good because we got to know the players and community boosters to take to the game," Jones said. "When it came time to go to the East Carolina game, Marshall decided they were going to fly down. They were going to charter a plane. It was 7:37 on a rainy and foggy Saturday morning outside of the preferred flight path. Circling town on the way down, the plane nosedived into the runway near where Interstate 64 crossing the Big Sandy River, 64 crosses the Big Sandy River, runway near where Interstate 64 crossing the Big Sandy River. "I thought you were with me," Jones said.

The Parthenon staff editor Jeff Nathan, 29, was one of the 75 who lost their lives in the plane crash Nov. 14, 1970. Nathan was widely respected by his coworkers, friends and professors.

"Jeff was a loving brother and a family guy. He had lots of big brothers, but Jeff best were astounded by the enthusiasm he showed for the craft. Journalism. Those who knew Jeff best were amazed by the amount of high quality work he submitted 5-7 per week, more than 100 per semester and was noted as a "regular" in the newsroom. Nathan, sometimes referred to as "the man with two first names" by journalists and admirers of the "reporter of the years." And it arrived the day before the plane crashed. "We shared a bedroom for years and fought the way brothers do, but Jeff was a great guy. I remember Jeff sent me a Marshall sweatshirt, for no particular reason and it arrived the day before the plane crashed," Jones said.

PIKE fundraiser honors fallen brothers among 75 plane crash victims

By RILEY MACKENZIE

Marshall University’s Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity members are remembering those who lost their lives in the 1970 Martha plane crash. Pi Kappa Alpha brothers have made an annual sale of wristbands at the Memorial Student Center.

They sell rubber wristbands every year to raise money for their alumni association. The association helps the fallen brothers among Pi Kappa Alpha families.

“Whenever we have Homecoming events and like that, we usually have a big sale. We don’t talk about it too much. It’s a good way for us to do a fundraiser,” said Layne Scott, a former Pi Kappa Alpha house president. “We have a big sale for the Pi Kappa Alpha house. It’s a memorial sale. It’s a memorial theme.”

The 1970s plane crash took the lives of all 75 members on board. Of those 75, five members were of Pi Kappa Alpha.

“We also have a man that plays the piano every year,” said Ryan Bozeman, a former Pi Kappa Alpha brother. “He plays the song ‘Amazing Grace.’”

This year’s wristband is made of black rubber and says, “We also have a man that plays the piano every year.”

“We have seen great student participation and this year the turn out has been really good,” said Ryan Bozeman, a former Pi Kappa Alpha brother. “This year’s wristband is going to go along with the black live matter that Marshall is having on the 14th of this month. Thankfully, many people have reached out and supported us.”

Berry Bozeman will continue to sell the wristbands for an entire month. He will be in three weeks in the Memorial Student Center.

“We want to help our brothers and we want to help the fraternity. It comes by the house every year and we play the bagpipes in front of the memorial on this day commemorating since it was best friends with James as well,” Bozeman said. “We play the song ‘Amazing Grace.’”

Blackout jerseys to honor the 75

By MACKENSIE KYLER

A seven-year-old story is coming back to life this week at Marshall University. In 2013, a memorial student center statue was dedicated to the 75 who died in the plane crash. It was a memorial to the Marshall football team at the time of the crash. It was a memorial to the lives of all 75 members on board.

When I heard that, I had total respect for him. We became fast friends. I still remember him. We played the same sport, and we were able to bond over the tragedy. I want to tell the 100 percent truth. In other words, this was his story, and I told it to everyone.”

I want to tell the 100 percent truth. In other words, this was his story, and I told it to everyone. What is different about this version of the Marshall plane crash story?

What is “A Coach in Progress” about?

I believe it was Matthew Fox in an interview who said Red Dawson. “We're at 100 percent when it comes to their stories about how they used to hang out and play football together.”

Every year on the anniversary of the plane crash, members of the fraternity dress up and play the bagpipes in front of the memorial on this day commemorating since it was best friends with James as well, Bozeman said. “We play the song ‘Amazing Grace.’”

I’m here today,” Jones said. “I felt like a lot of the other student groups that suffered an unspeakable loss is still remembered to this day. It was the 30th year (anniversary) of the crash and they had black jerseys for one game the following season.

We're at 100 percent when it comes to their stories about how they used to hang out and play football together.”
